Eakins 'incensed' if hospital funds misused

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

MPP John Eakins would be "incensed" if locally-raised money is used to pay architect's fees for the as yet unbuilt chronic care addition to Haliburton Hospital.

"I'm a little incensed because it's not my view that the donations of the people were to go to that," Eakins said in a telephone interview. "The people donated feeling it was going to go to capital construction and that's where the money should go. This doesn't really help the situation."

He was responding to a story in The Echo which said St. Joseph's General Hospital may use fundraising dollars to help it pay its third of one-time planning costs totalling $380,000. St. Joseph's owns the Haliburton Hospital where it was intended the unit would be built. The Ministry of Health will pay two-thirds of the planning costs, which include $326,000 in architect's fees.

Permanent and seasonal residents raised more than $440,000 when the project was approved by the ministry in 1986.

"St. Joseph's can battle with the Ministry of Health easier than the average citizen can," Eakins said when asked whether it's St. Joseph's responsibility to pay one third when it's the ministry which has stalled construction, and may abandoned the project altogether.

Eakins said he told Health Minister Elinor Caplan his position, and "she agrees with me. I don't think the fund should be touched."

The fate of the unit depends on the findings of a steering committee on long-term health care, which will complete a report in few months. Although many people view the committee as yet another stalling tactic by the Ministry—and a way to make the unit too expensive—Eakins says the committee should be given a chance.

"I hope the decision will be good for all the people in Haliburton County," he says. "The people deserve more than 18 chronic care beds. They need support before there's a need for the beds. If people can live in a setting outside an institution, we should pursue that."

Acknowledging that whatever preventative action is taken, some people do need to be hospitalized, Eakins says "there is going to be a place for them. The important part of the review is that there are other things people require, too. But if they need a bed, that bed should be there."

He says he's glad to see the Ministry of Health and Ministry of Community and Social Services co-operating to improve quality of life. "And that doesn't take away from the chronic care beds. If the review should we need them, we'll fight like the devil for them."

When asked what will happen if the ministry approves construction but costs have escalated beyond the county's ability to pay for them, Eakins says "I don't think the people of Haliburton should be penalized for being held up by the review."

HOW DO CHAMPS RELAX?

HOCKEY STICKS AND BASEBALL GLOVES: Two seasons collided on Good Friday when these boys—many of them PeeWee champions—exchanged the arena for the tennis courts at Rotary Beach Haliburton. Goalies, wearing the usual layers of padding, used baseball mitts to try to stop the brightly-coloured ball.

Decision on sewer line is forthcoming

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

News on Haliburton's proposed sewer line extension should soon be forthcoming, says MPP John Eakins.

Last year, the Ministry of the Environment turned down Dysart's request for funding for the extension. It will link Highway 121 and Lake Kashagawigamog businesses and resorts with Haliburton's present sewer line.

"I think we'll have more positive news this year... I think soon," Eakins said.

Since Haliburton first planned the extension, "ministry standards have been strengthened," Eakins says, making approval more difficult to obtain. As well, this is only the second—and probably the last—request in Ontario to fund improvements which will primarily benefit businesses, not residents.

Eakins also believes the time has come for the county to spend more time planning and preparing for the future. Victoria County is growing as Toronto expands, and "we really have to be ready (in Haliburton County) before the avalanche hits."

Neighbours feud over Minden road use

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

A pair of feuding neighbours have been given two weeks to cool their tempers and come to an agreement over maintenance of their road.

Estella Burch objected when Minden council was about to pass a bylaw amendment to rezone a Mountain Lake property owned by Dr. Stephen Dawson.

After the rezoning, Dawson proposes to sever the property into four lots. Dawson's lot is one of five in a subdivision serviced by Burch Drive.

Burch, who established the subdivision 12 years ago, objects to more lots because she has assumed responsibility for the municipally-owned road. Maintenance is paid for by Burch, Dawson, and the three other property-owners. But the pair are have been arguing over responsibility when more lots are created.

"I suggest council should approve the rezoning, but on the condition that the lots have no access until Burch Drive is assumed by the municipality," she said. Another idea of Burch's is for the newly created lots to be accessed by water only.

"I have tried very hard to come to an agreement with the Dawsons if they plan to create lots," she added.

After the public rezoning meeting on March 27, Burch approached

Industrial site search frustrating

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Another attempt by Minden to acquire land for an industrial park site has been aborted.

"It's very disappointing that we just can't seem to get an agreement," lamented Reeve Ray Moore during Thursday's council meeting. "It's quite sad."

Industrial committee chairman Bill

Payne and member Dean Elliott held a meeting on March 29 with Verne Graham.

The committee had asked that Graham sell a 100-acre piece of rural property to the municipality for $85,000, requesting that he also go through the required rezoning and handle other things as a condition of the sale.

During the meeting, Graham offered to sell the property for $185,000 with no conditions. The committee rejected the offer.

Graham later told The Echo that the industrial committee approached him about selling the land, and that he was not trying to gouge the municipality by raising the offer. "I really had no interest in selling the property, anyway," he said.

Still, Reeve Moore found the experience disheartening.

"Every time we come close (to acquiring land), someone just throws the screws in somehow," he said.

Dysart distraught over funding wait

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

To wait or not to wait. That is the question faced by Dysart et al council in considering an expansion of the Haliburton landfill site, which is filling up fast.

During last Monday's meeting, council considered a 1988 Ministry of the Environment letter. At that time, an application to expand the dump was rejected because a feasibility study was also required. The municipality has applied every year for a study grant ever since, and has been refused funding.

Now Dysart must decide whether to wait, or to go ahead with the study and pay all of the cost.

Councillor Murray Fearrey said the study would cost about $80,000. It must include a hydrogeological report, an operational report and a contingency plan. And, depending on the population served by the landfill site, an environmental assessment may also be required.

"That's a lot of money," said Fearrey. "Does it not make sense to search out a new site?"

"No new sites have been approved by the ministry since 1983," noted Reeve Bill Davis. The ministry's requirements for landfill land are quite restrictive, he said.

"But they've got to approve them eventually," said Deputy-Reeve Lloyd Leadbeater. "All our landfill sites are going to be closed one day. I think it makes sense to try and find a bigger landfill."

Council didn't come to any decision, but is discussing its municipal budget during a closed meeting this week.

Haliburton Lake firefighters want municipality's old engine donated

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

It's up to a members of a volunteer fire department at Haliburton Lake to convince Dysart et al council that using the municipality's old fire engine is feasible.

Reeve Bill Davis suggested that council donate the engine to the volunteers during last Monday's meeting. The municipality has received two offers on the engine, and would get only $2,000, he said. The fire department is made up of members of the Haliburton Lake Cottagers' Association.

"It's only an old fire truck, but it could save a life," said Davis. "It's definitely in need of some repair," he added. After making the vehicle fit for the road, members of the association would be responsible for housing and upkeep. "If we give them the engine, the association would provide the rest."

The lake association firefighters' job would be no different than before, said Davis. "They would act as a first response, and our departments would be called in to finish the job."

Councillor Dorothy Baker expressed concern that the move would set a precedent. "We probably are, but it's worthwhile," said Davis.

Councillor Murray Fearrey said the Fire Marshall's office should be consulted before the volunteers consider using an engine. "All lake associations have pumpers, but maybe they shouldn't be handling all types of equipment."

Baker agreed. "It's not something you would do on the spur of the moment. It should be checked out first." She suggested council defer its decision.

Deputy-reeve Lloyd Leadbeater was wary after hearing that the firefighters hadn't consulted fellow lake association members yet. "It's quite a drain" to expect the association to maintain the truck, pay for insurance, and house the vehicle. "It's a load."

Davis explained the firefighters will go back to their lake association with the request.

And when they return, "they need to convince us that they've covered all the bases," said Leadbeater.

Minden council provides two weeks for neighbours to agree over road

Dawson and asked that their lawyers draft a written guarantee that any new property owners would share the cost of road maintenance.

Dawson didn't want to get a lawyer involved, but he gave her a letter stating he would assume responsibility for four lots instead of just one. But Burch's lawyer told her it wasn't legally binding.

"I asked for a legal document, and he refused," said Burch, who then had one drawn up by her lawyer. "I have gone to considerable expense and time to get this legal document drawn up by my lawyer, and again he refused."

Reeve Ray Moore told Burch the matter couldn't be handled by council. "This is a legal problem which must be resolved between you and Dr. Dawson," he explained, adding that there is the possibility of an Ontario Municipal Board hearing if council passes the rezoning. "You will have the rights to object."

When the subdivision was approved, Burch accepted responsibility for five lots only. "I'm not responsible for extra," Burch said if more lots are created, she will end all responsibility for the road.

"I carry liability insurance for that road. Can you imagine the hassle? Trying to deal with the possibility of eight people on that road is just going to double the problem I have now," she said. "I will not be responsible for Burch Drive and I will lodge a complaint with the OMB."

Moore said council's hands are tied as far as the rezoning goes. "All lots front Mountain Lake, all conform. If you deny access, we can't stop you. But we can't deny the rezoning."

Councillor Lewis Stevens disagreed, saying the municipality does have some control because the road lies on its property.

Dawson had the opportunity to present his side, and said he has tried to be accommodating. "I don't feel I've caused Mrs. Burch any hassle. I have every intention to pay my fair share."

At first he didn't want to involve any lawyers in the matter. "Since I had no intention of cheating anyone,

I didn't see any reason to use a lawyer to confirm my good intentions."

When Burch presented the legal document, "she insisted I sign it immediately," he said. "I wanted to show it to my lawyer, but she said, 'No, it's now or never.'"

"... It's totally unreasonable for Mrs. Burch to deny me the chance to sign with my lawyer's help."

Dawson then handed out copies of the agreement drawn up by Burch's lawyer, and offered to sign it in the presence of council.

But Burch said the document wasn't complete because it didn't include a description of Dawson's deed. She also expressed frustration that, after trying to get Dawson to come to an agreement for the past month, she was "left hanging until the last minute."

Moore said the matter seemed positive. "You two are very close to an agreement."

The vice-chairman of Minden's Planning Advisory Committee, Verne Graham, was present and confirmed that a change of zoning has no effect on a person's right of way. "Access of the lots created is by water," he said.

The neighbours continued to bicker back and forth, with Burch saying she was too upset to have Dawson sign the agreement without the advice of her lawyer.

Moore finally said council should pass the bylaw, giving the neighbours 20 days to come to an agreement before any objection to the OMB could be filed.

But council ended up following a suggestion by Dawson to delay its decision. The bylaw was read twice, with a third and final reading scheduled for council's next meeting on April 26.

Letter protesting funding cuts suggests how to vote: Stanhope

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Stanhope's displeasure over provincial funding cutbacks doesn't go as far as telling people how to vote.

Council was asked to include an Association of Municipalities of Ontario (AMO) letter with its tax bills. The letter, addressed "Dear Mr. and Mrs. Citizen", says that as funds decrease, municipal responsibilities increase. "Your local services and programs are in danger."

"The bottom line? Grossly inadequate funding will mean reduced services in (Stanhope). That's the province's fault."

That was a bit harsh for council but what followed bothered members more: "The Peterson government will have to answer to the people of Ontario for denying their local leaders the tools to do the job expected of them."

"We have to work closely with the provincial government and various ministries and we've had good co-operation with MPP John Eakins," said Reeve Harry Davis. "And I don't think we should be directing people how to vote."

"Without the letter, people already have it on their minds," said Councillor Fred Gardner. "It's an arena we shouldn't be performing in."

The letter won't be sent to ratepayers.

Bus trip for ice cream reveals sweet memories

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

GOING TO MINDEN for an ice cream cone can be a bittersweet experience.

"I'm not coming back," one woman warned, only half in jest, as her wheelchair was being strapped into place in the new DYMO (Dysart Mobile) bus parked outside Extencicare in Haliburton.

An hour later in Minden, choked with emotion, she brushes away inquiries about how she's doing. After she composes herself, she jokes with volunteer driver Jim Tice. "I want to get off at the next stop."

The new bus had just passed the house where she had lived with her husband for 35 years. Now he was gone, she was living at Extencicare, and Minden and the house were so familiar, and yet so different. She didn't point out her old home to the others on the bus, "but I gave it a good stare."

Last Thursday, Extencicare's recreation director, Barbara Fryer, booked the new bus for a residents' outing. Anyone in the municipality—and in other municipalities if they get their council's support—can make use of the county's first public transportation service if they successfully prove they have a disability.

Extencicare has a group of qualified patrons centrally located and has been quick to take advantage of the bus's presence. (Staff and residents also helped to raise money for the bus.) There were more people wanting to go to Minden for ice cream than there were seats on the bus, so another outing will have to be planned soon.

"Most of them will look most forward to going out to community churches on Sunday," says Mrs. Fryer. "But we don't want to be using the bus by ourselves. We want to mix with other people."

The excuse this day is simple. It's spring.

A guided tour

For Ethel Curry, the trip paints her as an excellent tour guide. One of the six ambulatory passengers—joined by the six passengers in wheelchairs—she provided the commentary as the bus passed familiar places.

"That's where my house was," she says as the bus pulls up to the stop sign at Highland and Pine. The red-brick house on her left is the house her father, W.R. Curry, built. Across the way is the bridge over the dam, where a mill once stood. Logs roared by in the spring then.

The mainstreet stores are given their old names—Earle's, Kellett's, Dr. Carroll's, Robertson's, Dollo's. St. George's Church was much smaller when she was a little girl.

Out on the highway, she mentions that spring is one of her favourite times of year because it affords a clear view into her beloved woods. The overflowing ditches used to have yellow flowers in the spring and the lake in front of PineStone was once a swamp. "This country is full of swamps," says the retired teacher who has put many on canvas.

Memories whizz by for all of them.

"I lived so long in a country where there was no snow and leaves stayed the same," Canada's four seasons are a joy, says Bea Grolman. She was born in Java and moved to Holland before the war. "I like spring and winter."

"I've heard so much about Hyland Crest it would be nice to see it," Mrs. Grolman adds. Miss Curry can remember visiting her father and step-mother there. "I used to drive to Minden in 20 minutes and would take the dog and a chocolate bar."

Perhaps when a formal visit is arranged, she'll be there to say hello to her step-mother, Lilian Curry, who is still there.

Soaking up the season

Everyone else on the bus is quiet unless asked a question. But their eyes are opened wide, soaking in the sights and sensations of the changing seasons.

At Kawartha Dairy, no one says no to an ice cream cone. This favourite past-time also brings back the memories. "The best is when you have a young coconut—the inside is soft—and they make ice cream of that," says Mrs. Grolman.

Passengers vote in favour of driving into Minden. "Look, they've got 40 per cent off," Mrs. Fryer tells the female passengers. The seed for another trip is planned, for women will be women. And women must shop.

"We'll be able to go on boat rides," Mrs. Fryer adds as the bus passes Soyer's/Kashagawigamog Lake on the way back to Haliburton.

It's the simple pleasures in life which can mean the most. To these people who have had to forego those pleasures because getting out was previously such a problem, the wheelbus is like a breath of spring air.

at the Maple Lake landfill site. It just so happened that as a municipal worker was cleaning it up, the garbage bag opened and he found several envelopes addressed to a certain someone in Stanhope Township.

Not to say that it was this someone who did the illegal dumping. No, council wouldn't suggest that. But it did direct clerk-treasurer Gerald Bain to phone this certain someone and mention that their name had been linked to the garbage. Just in case it would ever happen again.

"They'll know we're watching," said Councillor Murray Daniels.

No one can dump on Stanhope

MEMORIES ROLL BY: When Ethel Curry joined other Extencicare residents on a DYMO bus trip to Minden last week, she proved herself an able tour guide. As familiar

Stanhope drops Hwy 35 tourist booth but considers kiosk as an alternative

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Tourists driving along "Scenic Highway 35" will no longer be able to stop in at the tourist booth at the Highway 118 intersection, but Stanhope council believes a local business group has come up with a better way to serve information needs.

Last summer, only 800 visitors dropped by the booth which the township rented from Carnarvon Lumber. After paying for rent, telephone service and a staff person, this worked out to a cost of $3 per inquiry.

Council was about to consider closing down the booth at last Wednesday's meeting when it heard a presentation from Scenic 35 Association members Joachim Matysek and Gary Grosschadle.

They want council to pay the one-time cost of installing an information kiosk at the new Petro-Canada station, which is kitty corner to the township booth. The three-sided, year-round, illuminated structure would have posted notices and brochures of local businesses.

Cost is estimated at $3,500 and the association would pay for future maintenance and operating costs. The information booth cost $2,700 a summer.

"Highways 118 is becoming a major feed into this area," said Matysek, and there's access to the kiosk from booth highways.

"Having witnessed the system we've been going with in the past, this is excellent," said Councillor Eleanor Harrison, who added hours would go by without visitors to the booth. "This will do the job well, if not better."

"The only thing we have to consider is cost," said Reeve Harry Davis. "We're trying to put our finances together and we need the cash flow to do other things."

Since the kiosk will be in Minden

Township, Davis suggested approaching Minden council to pick up part of the tab.

"We're of the impression this is to the benefit of this area more," said Matysek, who noted the information booth was also in Minden Township and yet funded by Stanhope. "If this concept works, Scenic 35 might want one in the Minden area."

Davis asked if the association would be willing to wait another year. That would be a disappointment, the representatives replied, but one they'd have to live with.

An observer at the meeting, former councillor Jock Mavor, asked whether kiosk advertisers would have to be members of Scenic 35. "I'd have a problem with public money being spent for a private club."

Council decided not to open the tourist booth and to consider the funding request in its budget deliberations.

Alternatives to institutions can address some needs

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

Housing was the main topic dealt with by the steering committee studying the county's long-term health care, social services and accommodation during last Tuesday's meeting.

Three presentations included one by the county's Chief Administrative Officer, Gary McKnight, who discussed a housing statement recently completed through the Haliburton Social Action Committee.

McKnight highlighted some of the main findings of the study, which outlines a need for family-oriented housing, especially for low-income earners. And within the last two weeks "an access to permanent housing committee" was set up, says Anne Gallant, health analyst with the Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Council.

A presentation on non-profit housing was made by steering committee member James Douglas, a program co-ordinator with the Ministry of Housing, and his guest David Howe, housing analyst with the ministry.

The pair discussed federal and provincial programs, and Douglas explained there are only so many resources to go around. "Each proposal has taken on its own merits because you have to apply for funding for these different things," Gallant told The Echo after the closed meeting.

Next, the administrator of a supportive housing centre in Peterborough, Elizabeth Crossland, gave the committee some insight on this unique project.

St. John's Centre provides senior and disabled tenants with a chance to live independently within an apartment setting, while offering medical and social support services.

The centre features 102 bachelor, one-bedroom and two-bedroom rental units subsidized by the Ministry of Housing. With the Ministry of Community and Social Services providing support services, the centre is an example of a joint effort between two ministries.

"They maintain their independence"

On-site nursing is available during certain hours, a 24-hour on-call security system is in effect, and residents are offered the option of either cooking in their own kitchen or utilizing a central dining room.

Despite these services which provide security, St. John's Centre is run on a tenant/landlord basis, "not as an institution," says Gallant.

"A lot of the people living there are chronically ill with a whole range of medical problems, but they are able to maintain their own living accommodations and independence," she says.

The supportive housing set-up has certainly proven to be successful. The centre has a "phenomenal waiting list" of 240 people.

During the two and a half years St. John's has been running, with residents at an average age of 81, only two have moved to a higher care institution.

"St. John's is one of the first of its kind in Ontario, so they've learned a lot by trial and error," says Gallant.

Unique design and architecture of the building also help to provide a higher quality of life for tenants.

Practical features are designed with beauty in mind. "It has a lot of institutional features which aren't recognized as such," explains Gallant.

For example, the front entrance has an elegant round, curved front "which looks really nice, but in fact it's an ambulance bay. The whole building keeps away from an institutional feeling," she says.

Aside from housing, the steering committee also made some progress on past projects.

Two sub-committees were organized: a communications committee chaired by Doug Campbell to look at the planning of community open-houses, and at written submissions to the steering committee; and a data analysis committee chaired by Barb Dawson which will go through the rough drafts of data collected so far.

Gallant says the steering committee has accomplished a number of tasks to date: an inventory of services available has been taken; a move toward organizing meetings to learn the perspectives of six specified focus groups (seniors, physicians, service providers, etc.) is underway; and a consultant has been taken on to help with these meetings.

Consultant Claude Halpin performed the operational review of Minden's Hyland Crest Senior Citizens' Home, and has a cottage in the county. "So he knows the county, and he certainly has an interest," says Gallant.

Committee members are also doing an assessment of accommodation beds in hospitals, homes and institutions. Gallant says this survey will include "people who are in beds in Haliburton County, as well as people from Haliburton County in beds outside the county, and people who are using some of the community services."

"The survey is an objective assessment tool to look at these people's needs in a uniform way," she says.

The steering committee will meet again on May 1 at the Haliburton Hospital.

Dysart approves second catering truck

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

In approving a second catering truck licence, Dysart et al council has decided that it's not its job to eliminate competition for businesses.

Rita Sparling approached council last Monday requesting a licence for her Mobile Catering Service, featuring two trucks to service the Haliburton area and construction sites outside the village.

"I just thought it was something the area needs," said Sparling, who will prepare the hot and cold foods in Harry Pye's kitchen at the Rockcliffe Hotel in Minden. "I've been in the restaurant business for a long time, and I know what people like," she told council.

Sparling did a survey of possible clientele—people from businesses which are outside the area of village restaurants.

"They were all enthusiastic, and thought it was a great idea," she said. "I didn't realize then that someone else had come along to do one, but I think it'll work out."

But her competition isn't so sure. A letter from coffee-truck operator Donald O'Connell, read after Sparling left the chambers, pleaded with council to not approve any more licences allowing catering trucks to operate in the village.

"I have worked long and hard and have invested a lot of money," O'Connell wrote, adding that he was careful not to include the downtown area on his catering route so as not to hurt the business of established restaurants.

Submitting a list of the areas his service covers, O'Connell requested that council either restrict the service route of the new catering trucks or, preferably, reject another licence altogether.

"I don't feel this area will support another truck," he stated in the letter. To allow another licence "will spell doom" for his coffee truck, which is now in operation.

"I don't know if we should be in the business of eliminating competition," Deputy-reeve Lloyd Leadbeater responded to the letter.

"But we need stipulations for these businesses," said Reeve Bill Davis. "We have one with the taxi service." There are only two licensed taxi services allowed in the village.

"You can't fool around with free enterprise," argued Councillor Bob Nichol.

"I'm more concerned of a liability because we didn't give them a licence," said Councillor Murray Fearrey, who also suggested that the clerk be instructed to ensure the trucks are operating under health regulations.

Reeve Davis then agreed that council shouldn't get too heavily involved with free enterprise. "It'll probably take care of itself," he said of the problem.

Council approved the second licence for the trucks, which are to be operated in industrial park areas, and are prohibited on municipally-owned land, streets or sidewalks in accordance with the municipality's bylaw.

Policy needed for Dysart park use

A policy for uses of Head Lake and Glebe Parks will be drafted by Dysart et al's recreation committee.

Council decided a policy is needed after considering a request by HAVE (Help A Village Effort) to use Head Lake park for a music festival.

"This request has been here twice before," said Reeve Bill Davis. "And council agreed that Head Lake Park is not the place."

The municipality developed Glebe Park for community events, and would consider proposals for its use rather than Head Lake Park, Davis explained. "That was the general intent of what we would use that park for."

"We turned down CHANGE's (Community of Haliburton Advocates for a Naturally Good Environment) request to use Head Lake Park last year," pointed out Councillor Bob Nichol.

The recreation committee will be asked to develop a policy for non-profit groups, including policies on liability, use of washroom facilities, and clean-up of the parks.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS PLANNING WORK NEAR WATER?

The Ministry of Natural Resources will be holding an Open House for contractors involved in work near water.

Date: Thursday, April 26, 1990

Time: 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

Place: Our Lady of Fatima Church Hall, Minden Junction of Hwy. 35 & Bobcaygeon Road

The purpose of this event is to identify concerns and requirements of the Ministry of Natural Resources related to the protection of fish habitat and work on Crown Lands under water. There will be displays, hand out packages and Ministry staff available to discuss what constitutes fish habitat, Work Permit Applications, and the types of projects that are and are not permitted.

The Federal Fisheries Act states that "No person shall carry on any work or undertaking that results in the harmful alteration, disruption or destruction of fish habitat". Any projects in and near water must first be approved by the Ministry of Natural Resources to ensure compliance with this and other legislation. For this reason you are strongly urged to attend this Open House and have any questions you may have answered before the construction season starts.

For further information contact the Minden District Office of the Ministry of Natural Resources at 286-1521.

Editor's Note: We are pleased to present this "Focus On Earth Day" by R.D. Lawrence, a well-known and respected naturalist and author who lives in Haliburton County. Mr. Lawrence has a novel, "The White Puma", now available in book stores.

by R.D. LAWRENCE

EARTH DAY was first proclaimed 20 years ago. Today, less than ten years from the end of the 20th Century, it is well to ask: "What is Earth Day and what has it achieved?"

Being a cynic, I am tempted to reply "very little, if anything," to the second part of the question. It seems that like Christmas — the intent of which is to focus on peace and goodwill, is least among Christians, but which usually becomes exploited by consumerism — so Earth Day has also been annually "celebrated" by lip service to environmental goodwill while destruction of the earth and its resources increases each year.

However, in more recent years, my cynicism has been somewhat tempered by the undeniable fact that during the second of Earth Day's decades, more and more people have become concerned about the fate of the planet and more and more people are trying to heal its wounds. This is good news!

Nevertheless, one cannot afford to be lulled into believing that healing is proceeding faster than destruction merely because large numbers of people in Canada and elsewhere in the world are seriously concerned about environmental degradation and are trying to stop its advance.

Even if by the end of this decade we were able to recycle all our wastes... if we were able to eliminate the many poisons that are being discharged daily on the planet... if we could halt the rape of our forests... if we could heal the oceans and fresh water reservoirs... if we could stop burning holes in the ozone layer... if, in the final analysis, we could maintain balance and return the world to a steady state of natural develop, we would still have to deal with the growth of human populations, which, if it is allowed to continue at its present run-away pace, will exhaust the world's natural resources by the early decades of the 21st century.

In Canada, with all the goodwill in the world, agriculture cannot produce sufficient food to feed more than 31 million people. This news comes from the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization, World Resources Institute, which has noted that despite being the second largest country in the world, only seven percent of Canada's land is suitable for agriculture. In addition, our agricultural lands are only about half as productive as those in the United States and only one third as productive as countries such as France and England. Indeed, of Canada's total land area, only slightly more than three percent is able to grow crops and only four percent is usable for pasturing livestock.

Since 1920, degradation of the soil and explosive spread of urban communities have caused the loss of 65 percent of farmland in the Maritime provinces, Quebec and Ontario. Worse yet, each year we are now losing to urban expansion between 20,000 and 25,000 hectares of prime farmlands.

Worldwide, the global population has more than doubled during the last 40 years to its present five billion-plus figure. The birth rate is advancing at a geometric rate (that is to say, doubling continuously... such as: 2, 4, 8, 16, 32, etc.). At this rate, it has been conservatively estimated that by 2015 there will be between eight and ten billion people struggling to survive on the planet.

The loss of natural habitats is now astronomical. Already destroyed are 68 percent of wild lands in Southeast Asia; 65 percent in Africa below the Sahara Desert; between 70 and 78 percent in nine West African coastal nations. Only from two to ten percent of the rain forests are left along the Brazilian coast and the dry regions along the Central American-Mexican coast of the Pacific Ocean.

In Canada and the United States logging is slashing down entire deciduous forests to feed the demand for lumber, pulp and farmland, while the housing industry and landfill sites for garbage disposal are stealing wild lands and dramatically reducing essential wetlands.

But this is not all! Oil and gas exploration and mining, especially in the fragile northlands, are polluting the land and fresh water, destroying the soil and plants with enormous machines, spreading garbage and disrupting the ages-old migration routes of the caribou.

In the ocean, untold tons of poisons and wastes

The litany of abuses we have inflicted on this planet can some-times seem endless. But there is cause for hope. As more people become aware of the problems, more people want to work together to solve them. That's what Earth Day is all about.

EARTH

have been dumped in both the Atlantic and Pacific. Drift nets in the Pacific, some of which are five kilometers long, are each year killing some two million seabirds and more than 100,000 marine mammals. In the Pacific also, seine nets for yellowfin tuna cause thousands of dolphins to drown every fishing season. In the North Pacific, salmon nets each year wantonly destroy some 20,000 Dall's porpoises and some 700 fur seals, while shrimp nets in the Gulf of Mexico are killing endangered sea turtles.

In Washington D.C., Dr. Michael W. Fox, a friend of mine and the scientific adviser of the Humane Society of the United States, notes in one of his recent books Agricide: The Hidden Crisis That Affects Us All, Schoken Books, New York, that the industrialization of agriculture in North America has become a threat to future generations. It is, he says, responsible for widespread soil erosion, the depletion of deep-water aquifers, the deterioration of soil quality, and the pollution of the air, water and food.

The only beneficiaries, notes Dr. Fox are those involved in agribusiness itself: the petrochemical industry—which manufactures pesticides and fertilizers, and which now monopolizes much of the world's agricultural seed stocks; the equipment manufacturers; the grain-livestock feed industries; the pet food industry; the pharmaceutical industry; and the wholesale food industry.

If the structure and practice in agriculture is not quickly changed and made ecologically more sound, health-inducing, humane, and equitable, says Dr. Fox, the next generation will face inevitable agricide — the death of farming. Such a happening would lead to a probable extinction of humankind.

The litany of earth degradation goes on, but this column has dispensed more than enough "bad news" for one week's publication. Now, I turn to hope.

As noted above, more and more people have become aware of the need to in effect save the earth. But being aware, and being concerned, is not enough. In recent times, governments and institutions and industries have become aware that their actions and decisions have led to the degradation of the world. They have become aware because people have voiced their concerns and their protests. Governments depend on votes, our votes. This means that all politicians should be told what to do by an informed and aroused electorate. It is for this reason that this column has itemized some of the major problems that face our societies during the start of Earth Day's third decade. Individuals are important. By telephone, in person and by letter, people should let the politicians know that they want to protect the environment — and that means all aspects of the environment, of nature.

While bearing in mind that no person in today's society can live an absolutely "green" life, free of the use or abuse of natural resources, individuals can choose what they eat, what they wear, what they use in their homes, what they select to groom themselves, how they use energy, and what they buy that they do not actually need. Then too, individuals should think about the numbers of their kind that inhabit the planet: how many humans are too many? What can be done ethically and thoughtfully to defuse the population bomb before it explodes and leads mankind to Armageddon?

Earth Day is not really a celebration. We have little to celebrate beyond our willingness to heal the environment. But it is a day to demonstrate the will to seek change, to find ways to live environmentally. It is also a day to recognize the problems that all humans face.

The September 1989 issue of Scientific American devoted its entire space to one topic: Managing Planet Earth. In the introduction to the topic, William C. Clark, senior research associates at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government noted:

"At the individual level, people have begun to respond to increased awareness of global environment change by altering their values, beliefs and actions. Change in individual behaviour are surely necessary, but are not enough. It is as a global species that we are transforming the planet. It is only as a global species — pooling our knowledge, coordinating our actions, and sharing what the planet has to offer — that we have any prospect for managing the planet's transformation along pathways of sustainable development. Self-conscious, intelligent management of the earth is one of the great challenges facing humanity as it approaches the 21st century..."

"What kind of planet we want is ultimately a question of values. How much species diversity should

Housing help

Whether it is a looming crisis demanding immediate action or a nagging problem that awaits long term solutions, the lack of affordable housing for Haliburton County's poorest residents is an issue that area councils and social service providers are struggling to address. Local citizens are familiar with subsidized public housing for senior citizens. It has been available in Haliburton and Minden for many years, and in both communities, accommodation for senior citizens has been increased through non profit housing corporations. These corporations build and operate subsidized housing for seniors, borrowing money from the private sector with guarantees from the provincial government. Their efforts are supported by local communities, who are generally pleased with the kind of accommodation the corporations build.

Senior citizens are not the only people who need public assistance to obtain affordable housing, however. A municipal housing survey completed recently through the Haliburton Social Action Committee, indicated a significant need for subsidized family housing as well. The scale of the problem is difficult to assess, since people generally are reluctant to respond to housing surveys, but more than 40 needy families were identified, and the number of people living in sub standard housing undoubtedly is much larger. Many of these people are single women with children, living on mother's allowance and other forms of social assistance, but they also include the working poor.

If affordable housing is needed, why don't local entrepreneurs provide it? Because they could not make a reasonable return on their investment. The rent a private developer would have to charge for new apartment would put it beyond the reach of economically disadvantaged people. Rent control legislation, which was intended to shield tenants from unaffordable rent increases, has driven developers away from the apartment sector and into the burgeoning condominium market, where profit potential is higher and restrictions fewer. Under present market and legislative conditions, private enterprise cannot be prevailed upon to alleviate the housing problem, so the search for solutions must lead elsewhere.

One alternative explored with mixed results and notable dissension in some local communities was the rural and native housing programme — now suspended — which gave low income earners a chance to own homes by subsidizing mortgages and establishing payments as a percentage of income. Many people who had struggled to buy their own homes without any public assistance resented this subsidy scheme, especially when it was revealed that some people who qualified for help earned more than people who had gotten ahead without it.

Low rental housing developments, once common in cities, are no longer viewed with much enthusiasm. Many have become slums, not because the housing was of poor quality but because tenants did not look after them. No local community would deem that kind of development appropriate, no matter how pressing the need.

Two options may offer some hope for the future, though neither of them is presently established in local communities. One solution might be to subsidize entrepreneurs who want to build apartment space and charge market rent. A certain number of apartments could be earmarked for low income earners, and the rent subsidized. This would encourage the same kind of mix of market rent and subsidized rent for families that has been provided for seniors through non profit housing corporations. A second alternative would be to allow deserving people to obtain suitable housing through "sweat equity". They could help pay for single family housing through their own labour. Such programmes already exist in third world countries, and Canadians are often a part of them. In fact, local people have worked on this kind of project in Nicaragua.

Providing adequate housing for low income people is a costly, complicated proposition, but the social consequences of ignoring the problem may be even higher. Creative solutions must be found, and they must involve private enterprise an individual initiative, not merely handouts.

To axe the tax, refuse to pay

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

OUR READERS WRITE...

To the Editor:

As I see it the G.S.T. is to be used to replace money the government—past and present—has wasted on committees investigating committees, unnecessary use of expensive aircraft and a host of other expenditures too numerous to list.

To say that the government is dictatorial is unnecessary — it is there for all to see.

When the leader of a country ignores the wishes of 80 percent of the population and does what HE wants to do, there is something very, very wrong.

I have just finished reading a book on the cause of the American Revolution in 1776. I have read several books on the subject but this came at a time when our government is trying to shove the G.S.T.

down our throats. What was happening to the Americans in 1776 — heavy taxation by England — is the same as the Tories are trying to do to us now.

Now I do not advocate marching on Ottawa with rifles, scythes and pick handles, but there may be another way.

REFUSE TO PAY THE TAX WHEN ASKED TO DO SO.

It worked in California!

If everyone refused to pay the tax what can they do? Arrest all of us? Where would they put us? If we were charged and pleaded not guilty in court it would take months or even years to process.

No Tory can tell me that we are not heavily taxed now. We spent some time in Florida this winter and found everything from groceries to gasoline half the price—and less—of what we pay here.

If we work together and stay together and refuse to pay the tax, we could have the tax rescinded as it was in California. Interested? Let's do it!!!!

'Mere mortal' finds letter shallow

To the Editor:

As a mere mortal and less-than-dedicated Christian, even I can see the shallowness of John Mitchell's conclusion, stated in his March 28th Letter to the Editor. Since, unlike the U.S., we did continue with Christian prayer and instruction in our schools, why did we suffer the same moral disintegration? His statistics lead me to an entirely different conclusion. If Christians have been imparting their holy wisdom in our schools all of these years, maybe we should blame them for this immorality they point out? Mostly I conclude how Christians insist on confusing immorality with poor morale. They also insist on correcting every human failure with religious intervention. The greatest failure I see is their major case of denial. Their condemnation and negative opinion sure haven't solved anything.

The world is indeed struggling, but mostly to find political, economic and social equality. Religious equality seems to be the hardest to achieve. How could we honestly strive for this equality and continue to favour the Christian faith in our schools? The 'end' of religious education really means the end of religious superiority. That superiority never solved immorality, but may have contributed to the poor morale? So where is this Christian compassion, tolerance and understanding they keep preaching about? These would better solve our differences and poor morale than this holier-than-thou arrogance!

We will never resolve our differences. We just have to accept that they will always exist. When all of us, including John Mitchell, learn the true meaning of humility, then there will be hope for true equality, world peace, humanity and the planet we occupy. Religious equality should never be viewed as an injustice when our children's future depends on it.

Yesterday's injustice is today's despair.
But justice today is tomorrow's hope.

FEIR PLAY

CREIGHTON FEIR

THE 16TH ANNUAL Ontario Hydro Employees Hockey Tournament was held this year in the City of Kanata near Ottawa. The tournament, hosted by the Eastern Region, was held on April 6, 7 and 8. More than 800 hockey players from all over the Province of Ontario participated. This year's winner was Pickering Hepcoe, a team which featured three players and a coach from the Minden area. Kevin Warburton of RR.1 Minden, who is employed by Ontario Hydro at Bowmanville, was on the winning team along with Mike Piggot and Tom Haley who works with the Hydro out of Minden. The coach of the team Mike McElwain a Hydro employee hails from Gelert area. Mike and Doug Levere are the only two people known to have played in all previous 15 tournaments. Nanticoke and Pickering Hepcoe are the only two clubs in tournament history to have claimed top honours three times. Pickering Hepcoe has qualified for all four Canadian Nation Tournaments and even though they have been Ontario Champs for the past three years, the National Championship has eluded them. In its four year history two titles have been claimed by Ontario Hydro teams. In 1987 Chats Falls received top honours and in 1989 Winchester claimed the title.

It seems like only yesterday that we were in the middle of May, 1989 and here we are, less than a month away from the Victoria holiday weekend, 1990. Many of the business people throughout the County of Haliburton are very busy these days, erecting new buildings, adding on additions or making renovations or alterations to their present business establishment. All of this, of course, is in preparation for the upcoming tourist season. Many local retailers have told me that business here in Haliburton County during the winter months and so far this spring has been slower than usual. It's hard to put your finger on any single issue that we could put the blame on for this problem but it could include several problems. The lack of snow during the winter months hurt snowmobiling, cross country and downhill skiing and other winter sports. The late spring hasn't been any help in this regard and there is still lots of ice in the lakes. Some merchants are worrying about the effects of the upcoming GST and higher interest rates might put us into a recession. I think through it all we should be optimistic and if everything goes our way we could be in for a record smashing summer. At least it's something to look forward to. We have had good times for the past few years and unless something unforeseen appears on the horizon, the good times should keep on getting better.

At time of writing it's very hard to say just when the ice will go out of Head Lake in Haliburton this year. In 1988 it was out by April 14 and in 1989 it didn't go out until well after April 20th. There is still ice in Head Lake at the present time and it's very hard to predict just when the last piece will melt. Last week they were telling me that there was still 22 inches of ice left in Redstone Lake and about a foot and a half in Drag Lake. Due to extremely cold weather conditions in December of last year it resulted in over average ice thickness throughout the winter.

If you like homemade soup and sandwiches then the place to be is at the United Church in Haliburton on Wednesday, April 25 when the United Church Women (U.C.W.) will be holding a Spring Luncheon and Bake Sale. The ladies will tell me that it's going to be a tremendous luncheon with soup and sandwiches, cookies and squares and much, much more. The time is 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. and all the proceeds will go to "Dymo, The Wheelchair Bus Fund."

Don't get your boat out just yet. It was snowing off and on over the past weekend here in Haliburton County and we have been experiencing snowflurries of and on all through the week.

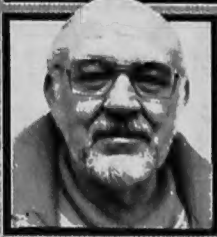

Ronnie Coburn's "A Breath of Scotland", a Scottish Variety Show, is returning to Haliburton for one performance at the Royal Canadian Legion at Haliburton on Monday, April 30 starting at 8:00 p.m. The local legion was fortunate to be able to arrange for this special performance again this year as the show is on a two-week tour of Canada. This show will feature the best of Scottish Dance, music, song and comedy live on the Legion stage. This is your opportunity to enjoy a clean, professional family show direct from Scotland. Tickets are on sale at the legion $8.00 advance and $10.00 at door.

A few leftover notes... Earl Sholer of Haliburton phoned me recently to let me know that the geese are back and last week a group of geese flew over his home and went on down to Head Lake... Mr. and Mrs. Rea Stinson have returned home from the sunny south... Mr. and Mrs. Vince Connaughan and son Danny were recent visitors to Toronto where they took in a playoff hockey game between the Toronto Maple Leafs and the St. Louis Blues... Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Leighton who have spent the winter months in Florida, have returned home.

POINTS OF VIEW

Children's fable has true meaning

AS OTHERS SEE IT

BOB GIULIANO

THIS IS MY FAVOURITE children's story. It's the only children's story I know and I tell it whenever I'm asked to speak to children. It is a Jewish story. The best stories are Jewish. It has a typical Jewish ending, leaving you to do the thinking. It is not a true story, but has deep truth in it. Children understand the difference.

ONCE UPON A TIME, Moses, facing his mid-life crisis, decided to go into the desert alone to think about what to do with the rest of his life. For several days he wandered and walked through the lonely desert pondering the meaning of life. One day he came upon a lonely shepherd and a flock of sheep. The shepherd was so glad to see someone that he invited Moses to travel with him for awhile. Moses agreed to do so.

During their days of wandering from water-hole to grazing land, Moses noticed that each evening before supper, the shepherd would milk his ewes (female sheep) and put a pan full of the finest milk outside their camp on a flat rock, retrieving the pan, empty, each morning. Not wanting to be personal and pry into the shepherd's ways, Moses didn't comment on this, but finally become so curious that he asked the shepherd why he put that milk out each night.

The shepherd explained that the milk was for God. Moses laughed, "God doesn't drink milk! God is spirit and doesn't need milk."

The shepherd said, "I have put milk out for God every night for more than twenty years. I know that God drinks it in the night because every morning, the pan is empty. God likes milk."

The argument persisted for some time until finally, Moses proposed scientific observations as a means of settling it once and for all.

So, the next night, the shepherd put his milk out as usual and then hid behind a big rock to wait and see whether God in fact came to drink it. The evening settled into the darkness of night. Stars and a bright sky illuminated the desert floor and slightly sparkled in the pan of waiting milk. Nothing happened. The shepherd grew very sleepy.

Just as the shepherd was about to fall asleep he saw something move behind a small bush. It seemed to skitter form bush to bush until it stuck its nose out whiffing the desert air. It was a little red fox! The fox soon trotted up to the pan of milk and quickly lapped up the whole thing, licking his chops in pleasure.

The next day the shepherd was very depressed. Moses chided him by saying he should not be sad, he had learned a great truth about God, that God was spirit and thus dwelt everywhere. "Yes," said the shepherd, "that is true, but now I have nothing to give to God. I only have milk and lambs. If God does not drink milk, I have no gift for God."

Then Moses was pretty sad, too. He didn't know what to say so he decided to leave the shepherd and get on with his mid-life crisis, trying to figure out what to do when he grew up.

So the next day, Moses was wandering alone again.

"Moses," he heard God call his name.

"Yes, Lord," Moses cringed.

"Why did you tell the shepherd that I didn't drink milk?"

"Well, Lord, I wanted the shepherd to know you better and to know that you were spirit. I thought that would make him a more faithful person," Moses defended himself.

"It is true," God said, "but now Moses, I have this friend, the little red fox, who has no milk to drink."

Getting readers when they're young

THROUGH THE PERISCOPE

MARTHA PERKINS

SOME COINCIDENCES are deliberate. This week, you might notice that we have many student-oriented articles; articles by students, or about students.

It wasn't planned that way, but it was meant to happen. Over the past few years, The Echo has been cultivating a relationship with the younger half of our community. I can't even say our youngest readers, because some of them can't read yet.

Everyone, no matter what age, is supposed to think The Echo is partly theirs. This is especially important with young people. When they see The Echo in the stores or on the kitchen table, they should know they'll find something of themselves inside. It could be a picture of their grandfather or classmate; a story about their class project; a Letter to the Editor by their friends. In some small way, they're supposed to find part of their world reflected in our pages.

Perhaps then they'll feel their world is an important part of Haliburton County. That what they're doing has meaning beyond the immediate sphere of school and home. That little kids have something worth saying to the big ones.

From our point of view, there's also nothing like a child's awed reaction when you take his or her photograph... "I've never been in the newspaper before." That it should be such a thrill for everyone!

How many Toronto Brownies have had their picture in the Toronto Star when they flew up to Guides? Or had their Grade 5 play reviewed in the Entertainment section? What newspaper is fulfilling their need to feel part of the Toronto community? Just because Toronto is large doesn't mean young children growing up there shouldn't feel they've something to contribute to it.

We also want to get children into the habit of looking through their community newspaper every week. Even if they don't stay in Haliburton, they'll help other newspapers in other communities be more successful at what they do.

Besides that, I think young people have a lot to tell adults. They too are mirrors of their community. Pay attention to the nuances of their language, what they're concerned about, how they view the world. Then reflect that back on yourself, and ask what images you are helping to present to them.

We have to listen to what they say—and not just because it's often funny. (I'm still laughing about the classified ad in the 4B Star, profiled elsewhere in The Echo. "For sale: Brothers and sisters of all different ages." When I was in Grade 4, I could relate.) Juxtapose R.D. Lawrence's feature (page 5) on what we're doing to this world to what the Victoria Street School girls say about drinking boxes. It's wonderful.

I'm off to another classroom today, to talk about what we do at The Echo. At the end, I'll invite them for a tour of our office, and I'll try to remember their names for the next time I see them at the grocery store. These young readers are as important to The Echo as The Echo will one day be important to them, I hope.

Prepare for coming of Earth Day

NORTHERN LIGHTS

VIRGINIA MUENZEL

EARTHDAY IS COMING on Sunday! I hope the sun shines brightly for us. And I hope everyone finds some way to celebrate. Then let's all make a commitment to the Earth.

There are all kinds of ways to celebrate the day. For instance:

- 1) Pack a litterless lunch and go on a hike or a picnic. A litterless lunch has no disposables like drinking boxes or plastic baggies. Except for the food that goes into your tummy, everything that goes into the lunch comes back.
- 2) Take a walk with a garbage bag and pick up all the litter along the roadside or in the bush. When you get home, sort out all the recyclables.
- 3) Plant some trees. Water them often through the summer. Feed them only organic mulch.
- 4) Start a garden patch and plant some peas. Promise to feed it only organic matter and to learn how to deal with insects without pesticides. There is all kinds of written material on the subject.
- 5) Check your household for hazardous wastes. Write a letter to your municipality requesting a regular, twice a year hazardous waste collection.

6) In this same letter, ask your municipality to install compartmentalized dumpsters at all landfill sites with clear instructions for recycling. Ask them to keep a supervisor on hand to instruct people not to put plastic bags in these dumpsters; to remove metal lids from bottles, not to mix magazines with newspapers, etc.

7) If possible, walk to a quiet, thawed out lake. Listen to the birds and waterfowl. Or visit a marsh or bog and consider the millions of living things the wetlands hold and how important it is to protect these special places.

8) Start a compost pile. C.H.A.N.G.E. has instructions. I can get them for you.

9) Begin to recycle. We have the instructions. 10) Read "Honour The Earth" by Roger Wilkins, "Word and Flesh" by Wendell Berry. Or ask the book shops and libraries for any other interesting environmental literature.

11) Buy a canvas shopping bag. Stop buying over-packaged food.

12) Write an angry letter to the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Bouchard, and tell him that what the public wants him to do is to stop asking stupid questions like, "What does the public want us to do?" and get of his duff and DO SOMETHING. Like, maybe make some rules and then ENFORCE THEM!

13) Take a deep breath of fresh air, and make a solemn promise to yourself to do everything in your power to keep it that way.

Have a wonderful Earthday.

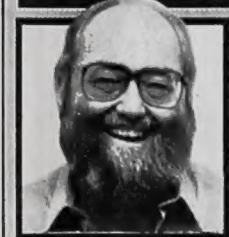

Pic of the Past

Since the early 1900s, spring at the Harrisons' farm on the Allsaw Flats meant daily trips to the sugar shack. This yearly pilgrimage started with Edmund and Evangeline and carried on with their children, who kept it up until 1966 and then started again "in a small way" in 1977. For decades, they had the largest syrup operation, aided by Bert who designed the equipment and finishing pans in 1933. In this picture are Harrison children Walter, Alfred and Elsie, Mr. Harrison, Fred Barry and faithful horses. Our thanks to the Harrisons for the photo and information.

Of roads, johns and dwarves

VARIOUS READERS have come along with comments or information relating to columns over the past month or so, and several of them seemed worth passing along to you.

The first is a correction, with some additional information as well, concerning my comments a couple of weeks back on the way highways in the U.S. are so clearly marked with lines and reflectors.

(I was reminded of how useful these markings would have been just last week when we took the madeup pages for The Echo across Highway 118 to the printer in Bracebridge through the wind and snow. It wasn't deep enough to bury such markers, but it did obliterate the edge of the road and the painted centre line).

My neighbor, John Cowan, who has also recently returned from warmer climes, advises that the blue reflectors near the sides of the road denote not corners as I thought. They are actually the locations of fire hydrants.

Some are right by the side of the road, others further out, and this is apparently not by accident. The ones on the opposite edge help firemen in a hurry locate hydrants on the other side of the road.

John was also able to enlighten me as to why the centre line with the reflectors was sometimes white and at other times done in yellow. The rules apply in Canada as well, and it is for quite a useful purpose, but I don't think one person in a hundred would know the answer.

This is a little difficult to explain without diagrams or using your hands, but if the line on your left is yellow, John says, it is the furthest lane left that you can go into. In other words, if you are on a two-lane stretch with two-lane traffic, like highway 35 or 118 the centre line would be yellow.

On a four-lane, divided highway like most of the 401 or 404, the broken lines denoting the lanes are white, but the furthest one over — along the median — will be yellow.

In wider sections through built-up areas like Metro Toronto, there may be more lanes, but the furthest lane marking to the left will always be yellow. It's a handy fact for a foggy night, and one you can have fun asking other people if they know about. Most of the people I have asked had no idea how it worked...

And apparently I'm not the only one who has become disillusioned with Disney. Perhaps you saw a story about how Air Canada employees arranged for a plane load of 70 disadvantaged, disabled or terminally ill children to fly to Orlando. Virtually everything was donated by the airline, their staff and suppliers. The only cash they had to dig up was for the load of jet fuel — and the price of the admissions to Disney World. I don't think I'm the only one who thought they gave freebees in exchange for all the publicity...

And according to a clipping someone passed along, the corporation is also upsetting their neighbors out in California, where Disney is building their giant new world headquarters.

To quote the first line of an Associated Press story datelined Burbank: "Many residents of the sleepy neighborhoods near the Walt Disney Co. are grumpy about towering additions to the firm's new headquarters, and they're not bashful about saying so."

If you thought 'Snow White,' you'd be right. It seems that, around the outside of the fourth floor will be 20-foot-high statues of the seven dwarfs, appearing to be standing on the third floor and holding up the fifth storey roof!

As an architect who lives nearby says: "It gives a whole new meaning to the word dwarf. Now we have 'stretch' dwarfs."

And just last week, I piped up about the problems involved in providing potty parity — standing room only in the halls for women, while men breeze in and out of their washrooms in half the time. Amusing, but not funny if you're one of the standees...

I blamed the mostly-male engineers for not anticipating the problem, and low and behold, a woman has patented a device she says will help provide the solution — the She-inal.

This is a female version of the urinal that speeds men in and out of busy facilities, and as laws requiring more facilities for women go onto the law books, this lady is going to clean up.

A urinal takes half the space of a conventional toilet, and means you can double the available plumbing in the same amount of space. Inventor Kathie Jones has already sold them to the John Deere tractor factory in Waterloo, Iowa, and the airport in her hometown of Pensecola, Florida.

Several other operations, including a number of sports stadiums, are seriously interested according to the former traveling saleswoman, and it looks like she's got a good thing, um — going.

I do think she missed on the name, though. Should have called it a Her-inal...

Some decisions don't come easily

DOWN OUR ROAD

SHARON LYNCH

HE LEANED AGAINST the side of the cottage and watched the younger man try to figure out what angle to cut the boards. He'd just about had enough of this kind of thing. It was early spring. In fact there was still snow in the bush. But the building season was about to begin in earnest again and he knew he had to make a decision soon. It was a decision Bud had been putting off for almost a year.

Living alone, with no one else to consider but himself, it had always been so easy to drift from day to day, year to year. Then one morning he had awakened and looked around. The friends he had known since childhood had moved up and on in their lives. Oh sure, they still dropped by for an occasional visit. But usually it was when one of them had had an argument with his wife and wanted to pay her back by staying out late. Or else they had nothing else to do so they'd drop by Bud's for a free beer.

They all had decent looking houses, fixed up with nice furniture and flowers in the yard. The trucks they drove were in pretty good shape and they had plans for putting on additions or buying a second vehicle for their wives. Over the years they had progressed, building lives of modest comfort and security while still remaining the same good old boys of their youth. They went hunting in the fall, fished when there was time in summer and managed to keep pretty busy through the winter.

On the other hand, Bud's house, while fine when he was a young bachelor just starting out, now needed major upgrading. A proper toilet for one thing. Furniture scrounged from the dump years before

SPORTS

Local team takes B side of annual men's tourney

A team of local players took the $600 top prize in the B division of the 13th annual Tim Davies memorial hockey tournament sponsored by the Coboconk Islanders over the weekend. The Haliburton Huskies team earned the title with a 10-6 win in the final game in Minden on Sunday night.

Some 46 teams participated in the tournament, which began Thursday night and continued throughout the weekend, with a total of 84 games played at the Dysart and Minden arenas. First place overall in the tournament was won by the visiting Clearview team, who defeated Lindsay Centennials 4-3 in the final game to walk away with the $1200 top prize.

One of the biggest crowds of the weekend turned out for the A division playoff game between Lindsay Centennials and Baker's AMC in Haliburton Sunday afternoon. Baker's lost 4-3 despite the presence of former NHL'er Rocky Saginuk and Keith Gretzky, brother of Wayne Gretzky and star of a professional team in Scotland.

The tournament, the biggest of the year in Haliburton County, attracted a total of eight local teams.

"It's getting so big, we'll have to decided how big it should get" said George Simmons, a member of the Coby Islanders team and one of the organizers. Simmons said the tournament may have to be limited to 50 teams in the future, four more teams than participated in this year's tourney.

THE SKATER'S FAVOURITE

By popular demand, Melissa Forgrave, at right, was chosen the Haliburton Figure Skating Club's Most Improved Skater Award, sponsored by coach Mary Donovan. Fellow skaters voted on who not only had worked diligently to enhance their skills, but who was nice and helpful to everyone else in the process.

A BIG DRAW: Baker's AMC drew a big crowd to the Dysart arena on Sunday afternoon as they met Lindsay Centennials in the semi finals of the annual Coby Islanders tournament. The attraction? Keith Gretzky, brother of The Great One, and Rocky Saginuk, former NHL'er, members of the Baker's team, who lost 4-3.

Queen's Park not always different from a school yard during recess helped Nancy keep excitement in check. As March 19 approached, though, her nervousness knew no bounds. Luckily on the first day there she met a girl she had befriended on the day of the interview. Besides, "in two hours you're all the best of friends."

A page's work

Ms. Neizen ruled with a warm smile and tough rules. This was work and although there was time for horsing around, when they were in their pages' uniforms, they had to act like pages.

At nine, everyone had to be in the pages' quarters in their uniforms. At 9:30, house duties began. First they would get copies of the previous day's Hansard (the written version of the previous day's proceedings) and file it in large books. If there were a lot of bills to file as well, this could take up to an hour. Then they separated into two groups for their 10:30 studies—one group learned French while the other learned Legislative Process. At 11, they switched.

Debates made it even more fun. Most 13-year-olds might not know what the Meech Lake Accord is, but the pages became constitutional experts for a day as they battled to convince each other who was right. Ms. Neizen "made us think seriously about things. You should have heard us quarrelling back and forth. It gave us more of an open mind."

They learned what true quarrelling was all about in the afternoon. Duties varied but Nancy's favourite was being in the house when it was seated. "I liked it the house the most because you got to do the most work. The Executive Assistants have to give members certain notes at certain times and they want it there real fast. But you're not allowed to run. I hate it when two people give you two messages and you get them mixed up."

Being assigned to the press gallery was dreaded because it was so boring. "They never sent messages."

Although not allowed to read the missives, the pages could often gather what they were about from the receiver's reactions. That urgent message was sometimes a joke about what someone had just said, or comments which couldn't be said aloud.

"There are a couple of guys in opposition who are hilarious," Nancy says of the daily entertainment. "They would make funny comebacks between each other."

If things got too out of hand, the speaker yelled "Order". If this teacher-like ploy didn't work, he'd yell "ORDER!" "If they kept on being obnoxious they have a recess for 10 minutes and they have to sit there and calm down." Sound familiar?

Because the speaker is an elected official who is appointed to the job, he sometimes needs a little guidance. "The clerks knew what to do—they're the ones with the most knowledge. But they'd speak in French so you can't hear them."

Other people gravitated to the clerk for another reason—a big bag of Smarties which had been a gift to Ms. Neizen which she kept in the clerk's office.

A few pages were allowed to take part in the opening parade, when the mace is marched into the house. All the policemen stand at attention, snap their heels and salute them, which felt pretty special. It was also neat the way all the visitors would watch them march past.

Elected members were kind to the pages. Nancy never got to meet Premier David Peterson personally but he'd often pause to say "So how are all the kiddies today?"

"John Eakins, he was really nice," Nancy says. "He took us out to lunch and talked with us."

The pages' duties in the house ended at 3:30 but then they had classes until 6 o'clock. Nancy had got some of her work from Archie Stouffer, and the other lessons were taught to the group as a whole.

To brighten up their long week, the pages were taken on Friday field trips and had a chance to explore the city. Many pages were from the Toronto area and were more nonchalant about city life, yet to Nancy and others from small or northern towns, Toronto held many marvels.

"It was different. Just the fact that it was so crowded. It was sort of neat to be there, just for a change. But I wouldn't want to live there. They have museums and lots of things, but I sort of missed the quiet."

And, sort of, she missed her parents and younger sister and brother. Janet and Colin, well, they sort of missed their older sister too.

"Colin ran in and gave me a big hug when I got home," Nancy gloats. "I did not," Colin denies. "I missed her only when I wanted her on the school bus to tell people not to bug me."

"Some weekends she came home and went zip to her friends so I got to kind of miss her—but not too much," says Janet, who enjoyed being the only person to mess up their shared room.

All good days but one...

Because this session fell neatly between March Break and Easter, Nancy's duties at Queen's Park lasted four weeks instead of the usual five. She packed so much into that month, however, she's not begrudging a single day.

Except one. The worst day. The day when they were all walking over to AGO (Nancy has the acronym down pat, and speaks like a veteran Art Gallery of Ontario patron). Since it was their last day, emotions were running high and the pages were a bit overwrought. So when the teacher escorting them to the gallery—who wasn't popular to begin with—got mad at one of the pages, there was a mutiny. Nancy, the teacher's daughter, didn't know what to do. "That was scary because half your friends took off from you." She held her ground and walked back, albeit sulkily, with the teacher.

The pages have of course vowed never to let their friendships fade. "We want to have a reunion this summer. We're not sure where or how, but we'll have it."

Meanwhile there are all the friends back home to get caught up on the news with. A surprise welcome home party on Friday—"I was so red"—demonstrated that absence does indeed make the heart grow fonder.

Now Janet and Colin are waiting for the day they can follow in their older sister's footsteps. Because the application process takes so long, she advises them to begin at the end of Grade 6 or 7. Once accepted, though, she knows it will be an experience they won't soon forget.

be maintained in the world? Should the size of the growth rate of the human population be curtailed to protect the global environment? How much climatic change is acceptable? How much poverty? Should the deep ocean be considered an option for hazardous waste disposal?

"Science can illuminate these issues but cannot resolve them. The choice of answers is ours to make and our grandchildren's to live with."

I fully agree with Mr. Clark! The actions that we may take to redress environmental problems during the next ten years will determine the kind of future that we and our descendants will have during the second millennia of post Christian history.

My hope for the future rests in the knowledge that only twenty years ago relatively few people appeared to be interested in nature and conservation. The number has risen dramatically since then, as I know by the mail that I receive and by the number of lectures that I am asked to give.

On the 25th of this month, for instance, I am one of the speakers during a whale symposium in Ottawa organized by the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies. During the weekend of May 12th, I have been asked to be the keynote speaker for the CFHS's annual general meeting in Winnipeg, which has also asked me to become a member of their board because the federation is planning long-range conservation goals.

On Saturday, April 21, I am conducting an Earth Day Symposium at the Haliburton Forest and Wildlife Reserve. The program starts at 7 p.m. and a $5 fee per person will be charged. Proceeds are being donated to CHANGE, to help finance the recycling program. Then too, on June 16, at Head Lake Park, in Haliburton, an Earth Fest will be held and will focus on the environment, its needs and what people can do to help heal the problems that we face. There will be entertainment. All are invited. Those who wish more information, or who might want to help in any way, can call LaDonna Smith at 448-3272.

Snowdon swears in new councillor

Snowdon Township Council discussed the following in brief during its meeting on April 9:

New councillor

Mike Carpenter was sworn in as councillor to replace Jack Hills, who died last month.

Carpenter ran in the last municipal elections, garnering 210 votes. He is an assistant manager at Haliburton Lumber, and is involved with the Lochlin

Community Centre.

Reeve George Simmons welcomed Carpenter aboard, promising "there will be some hot issues coming up in the next couple of months."

Donations

Council agreed to donate $200 to the Victoria-Haliburton Summer Camp Fund, provided that the money is used for a child from Snowdon.

Also, $100 was donated toward the heavy horse competition at this year's Haliburton County Agricultural Fair.

Words for woods

A resolution was passed by council proclaiming May 6-12 as National Forest Week.

The resolution was passed in response to a letter sent to council from the Ministry of Natural Resource.

MORE LETTERS FROM ECHO READERS...

To the Editor:

As we are daily bombarded with depressing news about the declining state of our environment, it is hard not to become immobilized into thinking that we alone can do nothing to change this.

But the 12 hearty souls from around the county who met at Head Lake Park last Friday morning know differently. In a few hours much glass was swept and raked up from the band shell area, the river bank was cleaned under the scrutiny of the ducks, much to our delight, and the two play areas were given attention.

There is still lots to do. So if you need a lift in these somewhat confusing times, there is a connection between cleaning Mother Earth—our house—and feeling good.

We tried and it works. Thank you for caring.

Marilyn Mighton,
Stanhope

To the Editor:

Thank you for giving us some newspapers to look at. We learned many things about what is in the paper: Weather, police news, news reports, sports, classifieds, food ads, letters to the editor, real estate, editorials, and many pictures.

After studying your paper, we made our own paper, 4B Star. (See page....) We used many of the same ideas as in a real paper. We had lots of fun. We are sending you a copy of our paper.

Thank you for working so hard on The Haliburton County Echo.

Yours truly, 4B,
J.D. Hodgson.

To the Editor:

We are three girls from Victoria Street School who are interested in saving the environment. We decided to write you a letter about how we recycle at our school and some of the problems that we have.

Our whole school is now recycling their empty pop cans. We have a special basket where we put our empty pop and juice cans. Mrs. Dawson takes them to the dump where there is a special blue recycling box.

Each class at Victoria Street School also recycles at their craft centre. The children bring in things like ribbon, material, styrofoam meat trays, buttons and egg cartons to make crafts. We make beautiful and interesting things from these items that we would throw away at the dump.

The teachers recycle paper by using old paper to write notes on, by photocopying on both sides of the paper and taking paper to the recycling centre.

We would like to suggest that you try to recycle these things at your home... paper, tin, plastic lids and containers, plastic bags, paper bags, pieces of wood for burning and making crafts, cardboard and fruit and vegetable peelings. These things are more difficult to recycle... steel, staples, styrofoam, markers and rubber.

Victoria Street School has a problem with drinking boxes that we would like to solve. About 99 percent of the people in the school drink from drinking boxes. We know that it is much easier and faster to pack a drinking box but they do not recycle when you take them to the dump.

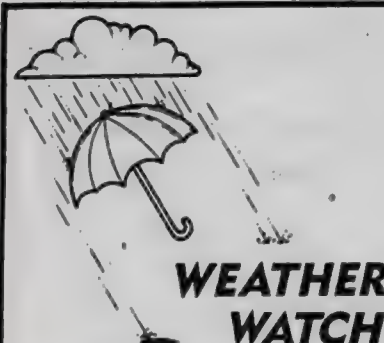

To solve this problem, we are trying to tell people to bring thermoses or glass bottles for their drinks instead of drinking boxes. We also think it is cheaper for your family to buy one large can of juice instead of three drinking boxes.

If everybody used drinking boxes the dump would get so full that there would not be room for anything else after a while.

After you read our letter we hope that your family will think about recycling if you don't already. Remember that April 22 is Earth Day and we should all think about saving our environment on that day and on every day.

Yours truly,

Michelle Lams, Celeste Butz, Taryn Clarke.

Once today is out of the way, spring should be here. Really.

"Wednesday morning will be fairly crisp but it will be much more spring-like by Thursday," said local weather watcher Jim Elstone on Monday night. That means temperatures should reach the low teens. "It will continue to be near seasonal through the weekend. There's a possibility of precipitation but it would be rain."

That brings up the subject of last week's weather. "No one wants to hear about last week," Mr. Elstone advises. "It's a week to forget."

There was precipitation of some kind—wet snow, rain or drizzle—every day except Good Friday, totally half an inch. "It's not taking much frost out of the ground yet, but it's getting better."

As the frost goes, so too does the quality of some roads. Mr. Elstone's least favourite stretch of asphalt is between the Haliburton Hospital and Highway 121. The county refuses to assume responsibility because the swampy conditions play havoc with the road's surface. "It's good for a year and it starts to go to pieces again."

Spring also means the melting of ice on the lakes. Last year, ice on most lakes was gone by April 25. The year before it was April 18, and before that April 14. But in 1986, the ice wasn't out until April 25. Mr. Elstone says most of it should be gone by the end of the month this year.

"There's no such thing as a happy medium," he adds. "Kennis and Redstone Lakes are about two weeks behind those other lakes going out."

Winter is just starting to arrive in Antarctica. Last week's coldest spot was a tie between Antarctica and Siberia. "Winter is finally coming back to the southern hemisphere. It might get to -65 degrees come July." The hot spot was Mali, Africa with 48 degree temperatures. "It's too hot to even think about."

Weather trivia: "On April 19, 1860, a tornado struck Aurora and emptied Lake Wilcox." (Lake Wilcox is smaller than Head Lake and shallow.)

Habits must sometimes be broken should be returned and left there now. His poor old Chevy was held together by wire, optimism and not much more and up until recently, the only plans he ever had were what to make himself for lunch. Winters were always bad for Bud, with too much time on his hands and little money coming in.

He had to change his life around. But it was hard to break old habits, especially at his age. So it had taken a year of procrastinating, trying to decide whether to gamble and go into business for himself, or stay in his comfortable, dead-end rut.

Working for a contractor had become a frustrating experience. He saw men younger, less experienced than himself, start at the same pay he was getting. After a year or two they'd move on, starting up their own company or going to work for one of the bigger contractors. Being the most senior man on the crew, Bud would always end up training them, fixing their mistakes and never getting any richer for all his efforts. Why his own boss had started out working beside Bud years before. Only the other man had moved to bigger and better jobs while Bud had stayed doing the same thing.

It got to the point that Bud woke up thinking about it and went to bed with it still playing on his mind. Finally, he rose one Saturday morning, his head spinning with the same old questions and decided he wasn't going to sit around the house waiting for whoever felt like dropping by. He went outside and slipped the rope off his dog. "Come on Butch, let's you and me go for a walk." The dog bounced around, hardly believing this bit of freedom when it wasn't even hunt season. The two of them headed down the road.

The ground was still muddy in places, but a soft wind the last week or so had dried things up considerably. Bud liked this time of the year, before the bugs arrived. Not too many city people were around yet and few cars passed him as he walked along. Fields stretched down to the lake on his left and the bush crept close to the road on his right. He decided to turn down the old homestead road, a way he hadn't been for a few years. Butch bounded ahead of him but always returned after some feverish sniffing, nose to the ground. Weeds grew up the centre of the road for it was seldom used and Bud looked forward to some solitude. Climbing over what was left of a split rail fence, he headed across an overgrown field.

Not much remained of the farmhouse. The roof had long since fallen in and the once proud chimney, a fine work of craftsmanship, had crumbled to a shadow of its former self. A hole in the side of a hill was all that remained of the root cellar. Bud sat down on a flat dry rock and looked around, thinking of the family that had once homesteaded here.

It had been a hard life for them, cut off from much contact with others, the roads impassable part of the year, sealing the family in like shipwrecked sailors. The closest neighbour in those days had been a good five miles away. They had come from England, trying to make a better life for themselves. When they realized the ground wasn't going to give them much of a life, the father had returned to stone masonry, the trade he had learned in the old country.

Years of work, with payment often in trade rather than cash, had gradually paid off. They had raised six children on the homestead and between the husband and wife, ended up with a home they were proud of. She landscaped, gardened and sewed while her husband used his limited spare time to build stone walkways between her flower beds and a majestic fireplace in the front room. But that had been years ago, long before Bud had been born.

He thought of all these things as he sat on the rock in the overgrown field. Then he thought of his own little house and what it needed. He thought of the frustration he had been living with for so long and looked at his dog, untied today and having a whale of a time running around nearby. He decided he didn't want to be like his hound, tied up and taken for granted. He wanted more out of life. Even though he was starting a little late, it wasn't too late for him yet.

North end of Kushog Lake is still open to development, environment ministry says

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

The Ministry of the Environment has no objections to the creation of new lots on Kushog Lake's Constance Island.

"It is our opinion the north end of Kushog Lake (i.e. that portion north of the Highway 35 causeway) can support the creation of 22 additional shoreline lots before an unacceptable decline in water quality occurs," writes Malcolm Foy, water scientist in the environmental quality assessment unit, in a letter read at last Wednesday's Stanhope council meeting.

In December, Tom Thompson and Gary Marquis approached council about severing off six lots on the island, which only has one cottage on it at present.

The Ministry of Natural Resources had said it wouldn't encourage further development on the lake. "The MOE has classified Kushog Lake as being highly sensitive to the addition of nutrients. Consequently, this ministry recommends that no new lakefront lots be created. This is to prevent additional nutrients from entering Kushog Lake, which would ultimately reduce water quality and available lake trout habitat."

Stanhope approved the severances in principle, providing the ministries agreed to the plan.

The recent MOE's letter adds "the south portion of the lake is presently at capacity in regard to shoreline lot creation." Sixty percent of the shoreline is crown land and undeveloped.

Firemen told how not to douse funding requests

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

A little creative wording will give firefighting funding applications a better chance, county firemen were told last week.

The province has budgeted $1.9-million to help fire departments upgrade their equipment, Jim Coulson, regional supervisor of the fire marshal's office, told the 40 men gathered at Tuesday's mutual aid meeting in Wilberforce.

In determining who gets the money, "county applications stand a better chance," he said, although this doesn't mean Haliburton County needs a county fire department. Instead, when making applications, departments should not mention a specific municipality. Say that the equipment will be used in Haliburton County. Monmouth or Dysart are part of the county, aren't they?

"How much hope would the county have of getting money if we don't have an Emergency Measures Program in the county," Monmouth fireman Max Walsh asked.

"It's not a big deal," Coulson said. "I know places which have got money without a plan."

After his presentation, Coulson explained that emergency plans outline what will be done during major disasters. "It doesn't matter what disaster occurs, the fire department will be there." Under the mutual aid program, they already have some idea who will respond first, and what departments will be called in what order for backup.

The county has access to funding such as Joint Emergency Planning Program, JEPP.

"JEPP funding is available for county-wide projects that would enhance the ability of the county's emergency services to respond to major incidences," Coulson says. "You can also get JEPP funding to develop a county emergency plan."

Already in place here is the Haliburton County Mutual Fire Aid System, which is overseen by supervisor Buck Baker. Departments agree to help neighbouring departments fight fires, and pay a yearly fee.

At present, Cardiff is applying to join. Coulson outlined some of the requirements the department must meet, such as providing adequate facilities, having a minimum of 16 volunteers and meeting Occupational Health and Safety Act rules. Cardiff must also "own and operate fire fighting equipment capable of adequately combatting fires in their own municipality on a day-to-day basis."

Cardiff Reeve Maurice Bradley, who was at the meeting with Cardiff fire chief Len Foster, is optimistic these requirements can soon be fulfilled. The township now owns four trucks, housed at two stations. An official opening is planned for July.

Pool hall paranoia belongs to the 'dark ages'

by SUSAN GROBER

Staff Reporter

The following was discussed in brief by Dysart et al council during its April 9 meeting:

Rack 'em up

Ernie Cooper, the owner of The Wizard arcade in Haliburton Village, has requested permission to remove five of his games to bring in a pool table.

Although he found no problem with the idea, Reeve Bill Davis said he feels there's a certain stigma attached to the game of pool. "Some people who would allow their children to go to an arcade wouldn't let their kids in a pool-room," he said.

Councillor Dorothy Baker disagreed. "Get with it," she chided Davis. "You're in the dark ages."

Flagging the rules

Councillor Dorothy Baker wasn't too pleased upon hearing that Reeve Bill Davis arranged to have a frayed flag fixed.

"Under the rules of Heraldry, you can't change the size of a flag," informed Baker.

"You can chastise me and whip me, but I thought I was saving the municipality $40," Davis said in defense.

Since being removed for repair, the flag from the cenotaph has never flown.

Paradise trailers

Since he's already in contravention of Dysart's bylaws, the owner of property along Paradise Lake will be told he can't upgrade with a new trailer.

Bylaw Enforcement Officer Dick Schell told council he's had a request by a man who has three trailers and a cottage on one lot to upgrade one of his trailers with a new one.

The trailers were allowed under non-conforming use because the bylaw forbidding trailers was in place after he started the set-up, explained Schell.

Council decided the man was asking too much, and rejected the request.

More trailers

A councillor who's also the owner of Rip's Sleepy Hollow trailer park is unhappy with an initiative allowing municipalities to impose an annual permit fee on seasonal trailers located in any campground for 90 days.

"We've been fighting that for two years," Brian Watts said. "It's a cop-out on the provincial level. All they're doing is putting the onus back onto the municipality."

The Ministry of Tourism and Recreation initiative means that seasonal trailer units will be exempt from property assessment and taxation by the Ministry of Revenue. It allows municipalities to impose a nominal fee of up to $50 per trailer each year, and doesn't include mobile homes or other permanent structures.

The fee is to be collected by campground operators and remitted to the municipalities.

Watts, who said trailers are kept all winter at his campground for free, complained that the idea is far from fool-proof. "There are so many ways to get out of it. Ninety days—all you have to do is move the trailer out and back in before the time is up."

"I have trouble with the campground operators being responsible for remitting to the municipality because there are ways of getting out of that as well," added Reeve Bill Davis.

Highland fling

Get ready for the twirl of kilts and the skirl of pipes. Members of this year's Highland Games committee have been appointed by Dysart et al council.

The committee for the games, which will no longer be sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, is made up of: Andy Campbell, Drew Cary, Earl Cooper, Joan Irish, Shirley Rap-son, Cindy Rodley, and Brian Sachs.

Along with events enjoyed during the first year, such as highland dancing and piping competitions, five heavy games will be added to the line-up of fun, including the Scottish sport of tossing the caber.

Council matched its donation last year of $5,000. The games will be held June 23.

Landfill fill

Councillor Murray Fearrey isn't pleased that crushed gravel is being used as a barricade at the Haliburton landfill site.

"Truckload after truckload of good crushable material is being dumped there," said Fearrey. "I'm sorry, but I think that's a waste of money. Why not just barricade it with a few tires?"

Road Superintendent Jim Taylor explained that the crush would be used as fill, which is needed at the landfill site. "That material will be used for cover."

"In two weeks it can be taken from Dover's pit for no money," Fearrey argued. "I think the landfill committee should look into that because it's just a waste."

Taylor explained that some of the gravel material is from the municipal pit, and some is from a private dealer, and added that it's too muddy to get into Dover's pit at this time.

Police to patrol lakes but extra manpower not to be expected

by MARTHA PERKINS

Nuisance boaters will probably be Stanhope's biggest policing problem this summer, Stanhope councillors told a visiting Minden detachment officer.

At last Wednesday's council meeting, Reeve Harry Davis asked Sgt. Doug Bernardi, liaison officer with the township, if the OPP will increase its marine patrol this summer.

Because Minden detachment is reorganizing the duties of officers, who now have more responsibilities, lake coverage will probably be the same, Sgt. Bernardi said.

He added that citizens should start taking more responsibility by addressing some problems themselves first. Talk to the boater who drives too fast and if the problem continues, then call the police.

"If people give us the information, then an officer would try to contact people," said Sgt. Bernardi. "We let them know we are aware of it and then you look for other solutions."

On some of the smaller lakes, pesky boaters disappear as soon as the police boat arrives, said Councillor Eleanor Harrison, who was worried about boaters who come too close to shore for safety. Sgt. Bernardi said Cobocok detachment partly solved that problem by using an un-marked boat.

Engine sizes should be restricted according to the size of the lake, said Davis. Clerk-administrator Gerald Bain noted that Stanhope has only three restricted speed areas and new rules take at least three years to be approved by the various agencies.

"You may want to look at expanding those areas (of restrictions)," Sgt. Bernardi said.

Council and Sgt. Bernardi agreed the most important step is to make people aware of the police's presence. In past years, council expressed concerns about youth parties at the Hall's Lake Park. This problem was somewhat alleviated after the police were told of the problem and cruisers periodically drove by the park.

"The appearance of the odd cruiser helps," Harrison said.

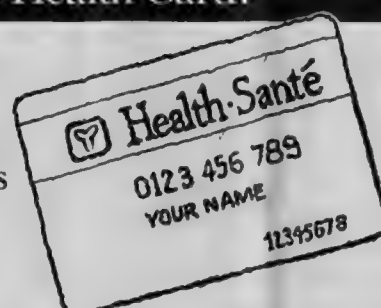

Council will also try to help publicize the new 1-800-461-6488 number for emergency responses. People can phone 286-1431 during regular business hours for administrative purposes.

SOME YOUNG PEOPLE FIND THE TRIALS OF GROWING UP MORE DIFFICULT TO COPE WITH THAN OTHERS. NESTLED WITHIN 360 ACRES OF BUSH IN KINMOUNT ARE TWO GROUP HOMES WHERE THESE KIDS CAN FIND HELP.

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

ABOUT 20 YEARS AGO, there was an attempt to adopt the Eskimo word chimo—meaning "I am your friend"—as the national greeting word of Canada. In 1973, a similar philosophy of fellowship went into the founding of Chimo Youth and Family Services, where young people are offered a helping hand within the walls of a group home setting.

Executive Director Bill Morton began the project with a property in Durham. Today, Chimo boasts a residence for girls in Beaverton, and a boys' home in Port Bolster and two in Kinmount. Head office is in Lindsay, and a community program is offered for Victoria County youths who wish to stay at home.

Nestled within 360-acres of bush, the two rustic homes in Kinmount have the advantage of large windows. Sun streams into a bright living room, and birds can be seen flitting from tree to tree. Sipping coffee on a cheerfully dotted teal-green couch, Morton explains why he started Chimo.

"At the time we developed the program, there were very few residential treatment facilities for adolescents. Drugs were just becoming something young people were getting into, and there was concern in the residential service community. What to we do about young people and drugs? There was a need for hard-to-serve kids."

Chimo was developed as a residential segment of a larger mental health care system, mainly serving kids from Toronto and Scarborough.

But changes in the government demanded more localized services. Chimo joined the east region services, and today serves the counties of Haliburton, Victoria, Peterborough, Northumberland and Durham. However, the principal number of cases are from the Victoria and Durham areas, says Morton.

The two homes in Kinmount serve boys aged 11 to 17, with six kids in each house. Kids are referred to Chimo by their parents who learn about the program from schools, the Children's Aid Society or the young offender's system. Programs are set up for kids with emotional and behavioural problems, difficulties which are identified through poor school performance or trouble with the law.

"In most instances, these kids would initially be perceived as being out of control," says Morton. "There may be behaviour problems in the classroom or with their parents. Those are the initial symptoms. Or they may be doing other things, like running, or experimenting with drugs or promiscuity."

But why do some young people find growing up more difficult than others? Such kids have suffered lags in their development, Morton explains.

"There might be an incident or a series of incidents that have happened secretly in their lives that they don't want anyone to know about, and they try to hide," he says. "These come out when the individual feels safe and secure."

You can't help a young person without also involving his family in the program, but this can be difficult, says Morton. Often parents are reluctant to seek help because they're worried they will be blamed for their child's problem.

"It's not an issue of blame. It's an issue of realizing there are problems, identifying them and tackling them."

The Chimo program works on providing positive, rather than negative, feedback "to provide a more safe, secure environment," says Morton. For example, rather than pointing out what a young person can't do, the workers at Chimo try to find out what he is capable of accomplishing and helping him reach corresponding goals.

Sometimes it's difficult for parents to be objective with their kids. How many have received training for what is the most difficult, at time frustrating, and important jobs there is? The people at Chimo help parents meet the challenge of raising their children.

mount setting. During their morning recess, some of the boys busily feed a number of birds which stay north for the winter. Soon the boys will return to the one-room schoolhouse to teachers Danial Lapierre and Mike Darlington. A heavy, wet snow that afternoon would force Darlington to cancel a cross-country ski outing he'd planned with the boys later in the day.

Workers at Chimo try to set up a partnership with the young people. Residents are supervised by one house-head in each home, and six youth workers. Four social workers at the head office provide family therapy for both Chimo's residential program, and the community program in Victoria.

The school is run by the Haliburton County Board of Education, and the teachers try to focus strictly on academics, although they communicate with the house-heads about four or five times each day.

Jamie Nicholson acts as house-head for the older boys, and says keeping everyone on a strict schedule is beneficial in the kids' therapy process.

Everyone wakes up at 7:30 a.m., then gets showered, dressed and ready for breakfast.

Once the kids are ready to eat, they don't just sit down at the table and dig in. In this partnership, it's the residents who take turns planning the menus, cooking the meals and cleaning up afterward. "With some input," adds Moira Brandon, house-head for the younger boys. Properly balanced meals are just as important as independence, after all.

In the evenings, everyone congregates in the living room for meetings to help plan things such as menus and group activities. Kids take turns in active roles as chairman and secretary, and each are encouraged to take part in problem-solving activities during these meetings.

From swimming, fishing and hiking to tobogganing, skating, ice-fishing and snow-shoeing, group activities vary with the seasons and tend to have an outdoor flavour. And the Chimo workers feel it's important they participate as well.

"Doing with" is a very important concept," says Assistant Executive Director David Harrington, who is responsible for Chimo's residential units. "The people here feel it's important to help instruct the kids if they don't know how to do something. If they participate and help, it changes how the kids relate and how well they work with adults."

Staff also have an opportunity to interact and relate while the young people are going about their daily routines of doing laundry, making their beds and cleaning their rooms.

EACH PERSON AT CHIMO has his own room. Each room has its own individual flavour. From battered, old teddy bears to tape-decks playing popular tunes, each boy is allowed a certain measure of freedom while living within a strict routine.

When a young person first arrives at Chimo, he feels scared, lonely and separate from his family. He misses his home, and he misses his mother. He won't visit his home until after eight weeks into the program. Until that time, parents visit Chimo once a week, and the only other contact is by phone.

Dealing with these kids can be frustrating, admits Nicholson, who has been with Chimo for about 12 years. "Sometimes you deal with a child who has never been away from home. You have to let them know that this place is okay."

"Other kids try to stay in control and openly resist."

It's a challenge to bring in some reality of what is expected and how their feelings are normal and why they need changes in their lives."

Through her 13 years of experience at Chimo, Brandon has learned that a lot of individual time must be invested in each child, "getting them used to the program, used to sharing, and helping them deal with other adolescents."

"We have to let them know they are individuals," adds Nicholson. "They do need to adapt to living in a framework, but they are individuals. We are always assessing their strengths and skills, and we spend a lot of time trying to nurture them."

Trying to build on a child's strengths is one of the challenges of staff members, says Harrington. "The idea is to look at the whole person as having some problems, but also having strengths that you can build on to help deal with the problems."

"As soon as you look at a kid as a problem, then you have a problem," Harrington says. "We help people see their potential to grow and change."

But when they first arrive, top priority is making the children feel secure. "We understand they're in a strange situation, so they need to see us as their protectors," he says.

Kids generally stay at Chimo between 12 and 18 months. "It takes about six months for one of these boys to allow people to enter into their lives and make some changes," says Morton. "After that time, we gain their trust and they tend to become more responsive, rather than reactive, to other people."

After leaving Chimo, a follow-up program is available through Chimo. "There really is no limit to service," Morton says. "It depends on the needs of the child or the family. We like to carry on until both feel comfortable."

Sometimes kids leave Chimo on their own when they reach 16, or parents want to remove their child earlier than staff members think they should. "That's difficult to deal with," Morton says, shaking his head. "We like to continue trying to help them integrate with society."

WHAT ARE THE REWARDS in such work? Morton sees how his staff members feel a sense of accomplishment in each small success which they discuss during regular case conferences. "I see some excitement and enthusiasm about their having made some progress with an individual. There is a real satisfaction in being able to understand the needs of a child."

Timing is crucial with troubled youth

Morton has quite a lot of experience in meeting those needs. Previous to starting Chimo, he spent 27 years as director of two other centres before working with the Ministry of Health children's mental health division, acting as consultant to similar centres.

However, in relying on outside funding (now provided by the Ministry of Community and Social Services), meeting the needs of children has been difficult through Chimo, a non-profit organization administered by a board of directors.

"One of the general issues we're confronted with as an agency is that we receive 10 times as many referrals as we are able to provide service for through our residential program," he says. The Ontario Association of Children's Mental Health Centres is currently dealing with a waiting list of 5,000.

Still, Morton isn't one to join the ranks of those who throw verbal darts at the province and complain about their lack of vision when considering funding.

"The ministry has been quite supportive," he says. "But so many need funding. It has become a ratings issue. They must determine what are considered the priorities of society. Environment, health and education are probably issues which most worry about."

Working in the mental health care system since 1960, Morton has never experienced a year where demand for service hasn't outweighed supply.

"We certainly can improve the system, but I'm not sure that the total answer is in providing more residential beds," he says.

Over the years, the ministry has been looking in to ways of providing preventative services through education. "There are those dealing with just helping people to improve their parenting skills and their ways of interacting as husband and wife. If this is done over a period of time, occurrences of more serious circumstances will be prevented."

But such preventative measures need time to work. Time is money. And money isn't always available, particularly considering that the recently released federal budget includes cut-backs in funding to provincial health and social services. "What happens to the number of people currently experiencing difficulty?" asks Morton.

AS THE 11-YEAR-OLD ON that afternoon's kitchen duty helps set the table, he's trying to decide what would go well with a lunch of wieners and beans.

"Can we cut up cheese and put it on top of the broccoli?" he asks. Clinical worker Larry Ringler explains the suggested dish would be more suitable at dinner-time as he arranges apples and bananas in a fruit bowl.

The kids who return to Chimo remember incidents such as these. They remember having no locked doors or locked windows. They remember having freedom to do many things, such as smoking, as long as they have parental permission.

Of course, there are restrictions. Kids are discouraged from behaviour which both Morton and Harrington says has become more common since the 1970s, such as lying, sexual acting out, and alcohol and drug abuse.

"Kids who come back have the same attitude," says Harrington. "They may say they didn't like their time here, but consistently they'll say that we were fair."

"The one word they all use is fair," agrees Morton. "We try to understand where they're coming from and once you tackle their problems, they come through with changes in their behaviour."

Timing is crucial when dealing with young people, says Harrington. "Kids today are more out of control in some ways, yet more in control in others. These kids need an external control."

"When I started out (in the '70s), kids could be identified under old legislation and then treated for help," he continues. "Now, because of the rights they have, kids are able to fail longer. I have seen court cases where kids are given another chance, and allowed to stay on the street for six months longer."

"You can lose a kid in six months to downtown Toronto, to drugs, that whole lifestyle. They're surviving, but that's it."

"It can become irreversible. They can hurt themselves, they can hurt others, and adopt a lifestyle of the streets. If a child is introduced to that lifestyle without a concerned adult to make changes, a lot of problems are created."

Chimo staff try to reach young people before it's too late, by turning around the negative attitudes which inflict their lives, Morton says.

"When they care about others and really care about themselves, that's when we've reached our goal."

Intended for last week.

A number of the Coboconk Seniors were welcome guests of the Norland area Seniors at their "Fun Day" get together at the Community Hall Thursday afternoon, March 29. Some 60 folks enjoyed games of euchre, bridge, uno, crokinole and carpet bowling. A birthday cake in honour of all the March birthdays was served, along with lunch. The meeting ended with the president of the Norland Seniors, Lloyd Brown, thanking everyone for coming. The Coboconk club president reciprocated. It was a pleasant day.

Welcome home from Florida to Irene Bartley who enjoyed her stay in the south.

The Save Our Schools committee held a meeting at the Norland Community Hall on Monday, March 26 with a disappointing attendance of only about 37 people.

Everyone is cordially invited to attend a video program called "Waste Watchers" sponsored by the Kinmount Public Library Board and made available through the Victoria County Library Service, to be presented on Monday, April 23 at 7:30 p.m. in the Kinmount Public School. Join in and become part of the solution to our environmental program. Admission is free.

Norland U.C.W. met on Tuesday, March 20 to 1:30 p.m. in the church hall. Roll call was answered by: Joyce Bartley, Rotha Bryant, Leona Fountain, Elizabeth Fryer, Ella Giffen, Hazel Gostlin, Violet Gostlin, Marion Pearson, Marilyn Wille, Arlene Holden and Gladys Marquardt.

Roy Bryant, I understand, is settling in well, at the Manover Bobcaygeon. I'm sure he'd appreciate a card or call from any of us.

All bowlers are reminded that the bowling will end for the season on May 15.

THE MIGHTY JUNGLE: The foyer at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School has come to life thanks to the help of Chris Andrews, Kasey Bull, Jamie Thivierge and Daniel Selbie. It's all part of Earth Day preparations.

Students go wild over environment, will take their message to the street

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

IN THE JUNGLE, the once mighty jungle, the animals are quiet tonight. Their habitat is being destroyed, their brethren are facing extinction, and the species which is wreaking such havoc doesn't know how to stop the destruction.

Rain forests may be down, but not out. Not when they have the jungle at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School coming to life to illustrate their plight.

The front foyer at the Haliburton school has been transformed into a veritable eclectic circus. Lions and bears and monkeys and moose. And even a few live rabbits thrown in for reality's sake.

Leona Carter's Grade 7 class is studying rain forests. To bring the lesson to life, the students brought in their favourite stuffed animals and displayed them amongst the fayer flora. (Teacher Charles Hughes contributed the rabbit family.) A sign asks students not to destroy these animals' home.

Just as important as the animals, however, are the trees they live in, the students say. Rain forests stretch around the equator and their plants have provided us with medicine, including a threatened treatment for leukemia. Humans benefit in other ways.

"When you cut down more trees, it takes oxygen away," says one student, to which another adds, "We're recycling so we don't have to cut down more trees."

Each class has a box where scrap paper is thrown, to be reused or recycled with the help of Mrs. Carter. There's also a separate box for cans, since most students, they say, drink pop for lunch. These cans are also collected for recycling.

This is part of what Earth Day is about. "You can think about ways you can try to cut down on garbage... You're trying to learn at an early age so you won't grow up and be litter bugs. You'll be wiser."

"It's going to ruin the earth and the world and older people will be dead by then," one says of why students should be involved in battling pollution. The class believes everyone should use blue boxes, factories "we don't need" should be closed, and garbage which can't be recycled or composted could be incinerated. The National Enquirer can be used to start fires.

One student suggests that to cut down on energy consumption, they could turn off the television and "go out and play baseball."

To make their message public, the students will be taking to the streets. On Friday, all students will leave the school at 1 o'clock and parade through the main streets.

Not all students are willing to do more. When asked if they'd be willing to bring a thermos rather than a drinking box—that's when they say they all drink pop—one replies "it's inconvenient to take this bag of trash home."

"You do anyway, all your binders," a friend adds. However, the other student is insistent. "In Kindergarten to Grade 4 you always got a thermos and I used to hate it. It was a hassle."

What would make you recycle, he's asked. "Fifty bucks... Recycling's too much work, I'm lazy." Recycling at school is easy though, he adds. It's convenient.

The students are told about last week's Letter to the Editor, asking for help cleaning up Head Lake Park on Good Friday. Would they take part? "Are they getting paid?" No. But then a student adds "You are getting paid because you get the park so when people walk by it doesn't smell like garbage." With the help of the EarthFest committee, which is staging an ecology fair at Head Lake on June 16, the students have found a fun way to get their message across. Musician Doug Cutler has visited and helped the students write rap songs. There will be a rap competition during EarthFest.

Here, in closing, are some of their entries:

Now listen here people/this is no joke/and neither is the song that Cara, Di and I wrote/There is a solution/to the pollution/Let's think about why/you just don't try/Join in our game/become a player/do a kind deed/for the ozone layer/Don't waste gas/use a bicycle/Do your part/and recycle/So that was our song/We hope you've learned/So for now/court is adjourned... Dianne Craigmyle, Cara Stamp and Jacoba Lilius.

Here's a little story I got to tell/about four bad dudes you know so well/They started litter all over this place/and left for us no breathing space/New York City was a garbage town/soon it was a dump all around/The down town cleaned up their act/New York City prepared to change back/To us they left the rest of this job/cleaning up another generation gob/Here we're stuck with an enormous task/Four clean kids like weeds in the grass... Jamie Thivierge, Mike Hartwick, Kirk Smith and Curtis Bain.

Children provide back-up at concert

by SUSAN GROBER
Staff Reporter

CLAPPING, STOMPING, SINGING and laughing were heard echoing through the halls of the high school this Sunday, making the final event of this season's Children's Concert Series a smashing success.

Even though the Haliburton Figure Skating Club was holding its popular carnival just down the road at the Dussart Arena, Kim and Jerry Brodey managed to pull in a large crowd of children and parents for their performance that same day.

And what an enthusiastic crowd it was. Dressed in a swiny skirt and bright red tights, Kim energetically started the show by asking the children to follow a series of her movements. The action didn't stop since.

The husband-and-wife duo had children on their feet, dancing and singing along to certain tunes. Some parents even joined in the fun, stretching their arms out to fly or flexing their biceps during a song about superheroes.

But they didn't lose the audience's attention while playing more sedate music. The children were focussed on the talented couple, even when they weren't asked to participate.

Of course, the quiet never lasted for long. After one slow, folksy song Kim leapt into Jerry's arms and screamed in mock horror, pointing in the corner. "Look! Down there in the river... an alligator!"

With measures of imagination and fun, Kim and Jerry sang songs and acted out skits about a wide range of things. Along with topics which would normally appeal to children, such as robots, television, outer space, and creepy tarantulas, the couple also offered a message of social responsibility.

One character portrayed by Jerry manufactures plastic wrappers for favourite foods such as popcorn and pizza. He feels successful when he sees

Cheerful atmosphere attracts many to popular syrup festival

WILBERFORCE NEWS

by: WINNIE SCHOFIELD

Rain and gusting winds failed to keep a happy holiday crowd away from the Syrup Festival held at the Lloyd Watson Centre on Saturday. There seemed to be a larger attendance this year. At times the line up for pancakes reached half way around the hall. When at last it was your turn to sample the fare, it was worth the wait. The pancakes and sausages were said to be the finest tasting ever. Congratulations to all the kitchen staff for their fine effort.

This annual affair brings together many friends and their families. Smiles and a cheerful atmosphere prevail. Articles, old and new, are laid out on tables for inspection and delicious home baking can be purchased from the stalls of various local associations. A dance in the evening drew a good attendance.

If you are planning on attending Bill Brooks' candle light roast beef dinner at Branch 624 Wilberforce Legion on Saturday, April 21, you must purchase your tickets no later than April 19.

To bring you up to date on what the local bowling team, the Topaz has been doing through the season, at last we can brag about holding down first place. We must hasten with this news, having just reached that goal. One future game may see us lose this exalted position. Our success is due to some excellent playing by our Elephant Lake members, Captain Sandy Smith, our youngest member Cindy Smith, combining with the great scoring of Marion Donovan. Ida Holmes has contributed valuable points and our newest member Bonnie Young has kept the team on the upward move.

The sympathy of the community goes out to

Chester Schwandt of Harcourt on the loss of his dear wife Mary Kathleen (Kay), who passed away at the Peterborough Civic Hospital on Friday, April 19. Kay was the sister of Paul Gadway and the aunt of Mac and Chester Gadway, Kathy and Peter. She was a member of the Eastern Star, Highland

The love of friends, the joy of birth,

The miracle of Mother Earth,

The winter, summer, spring and fall,

I thank the Lord, I've shared them all.

The Carnarvon United Church Ladies brought and served lunch. Before and after the tea Eleanor Hamilton played some of the songs of bygone days. Some of the ladies led the singing while others prepared to serve the tea which was enjoyed. Thanks to all the ladies who provided the tea and music. They were Mabel Russell, Ruth Gorrie, Eileen Crawford, Sandy Johnson and Eleanor Hamilton. We all joined in the singing. A special thanks to Grace Coburn for her lovely singing and Sandy Johnson who is one of our very faithful volunteers in preparing teas and doing whatever is needed to be done. We enjoyed it immensely.

In the evening we had bingo and Ed Fomenko came to call for us. We appreciate his coming very much.

Friday was Happy Hour. There was a good number there to enjoy the music by Don White, Charlie Hadley, Bill Geddis, Norman Graham and Bill

Payne. They were joined later by Ray Jenkins and Bill Moore on the piano. Some residents did some dancing for the amusement of others. Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins came from Belleville and everyone was glad to see them. Thanks to Ellen and Don Holden, Mary Guillemin, Donna Luke and Janie Thomas, the volunteers who looked after everyone's needs, and Linda Fry who keeps everyone enjoying themselves.

Saturday Ina McGuire returned from the Ross Memorial Hospital after a week's stay. We are very glad to see you back Ina.

Saturday evening Ruby Lewis was taken to Minden Hospital when she became very sick. We are thinking of you, Ruby, and hope you will be back with us soon.

Don and Marge Sisson came to see Ina McGuire Sunday evening and attended chapel hour with us.

Vera Archer had visitors Saturday; Helen Archer and a friend and Sunday she had her niece and nephew.

Jean Hewitt came to see her mother, Pearl Lyle, Saturday morning.

The Sunday night Chapel Service was conducted by Rev. John Burgess and Alice Jones played the organ. It was Palm Sunday service. We sincerely thank Rev. Burgess and Alice.

Monday Evelyn Coleman came for bible study. She told us about four different accounts of women and described their characters.

Tuesday Marjory Renick came for a hymn sing in the main lounge. She played the piano and sang. If we can we join in. Thank you Marjory for coming on such a nasty day too.

What's happening in 4B

HODGSON HIGHLIGHTS

by: J. Douglas Hodgson
Elementary School Students

THE ECHO has new competition on the block. Betty Moore's Grade 4 class at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School has just put out its own newspaper, 4B Star.

The top news story is the accurate foretelling of the birth of Elizabeth Turner's baby girl, Emily, on Thursday (a day early, but such are the pitfalls of the newspaper business). Mrs. Turner is their regular teacher who's on maternity leave.

Here are some of the interesting news stories, letters and advertisements in The Star. Please see the Letter to the Editor for details about contributors.

There is a new rule in the 4B class. The first person to speak out gets 20 lines, then 25, then it gets higher. Three people have already done lines.

CRIMESTOPPERS: The toy was on Nathan's desk. It was lost in the middle of spelling and writing. The toy never showed up in the teacher's desk. We checked in the desk ourselves. The mystery is not solved!

Dear Editor: I am writing about our computer periods. I feel that we should have more than one period a cycle. Computers are fun, exiting and very educational so I think we should use them more often. Please listen to my letter and think about what I said. It could mean a lot to many students.

Allison Kennedy.

Dear Editor: Please listen to what I have to say about short recesses. I think that the shorter recesses should be an half an hour long and the longer one a hour. Then we would have 4 and an half hours of work time. Because almost everybody likes recesses.

Thank you, Calley.

Dear Editor: I don't like it when there are indoor recesses because everyone fools around and it is noisy! The teachers come in the class and scream at you! I hate indoor recesses because they are boring, loud and they give you a headache. Everyone knocks over chairs, jumps on desks, and scribbles on the chalkboard! Please HELP this problem.

Natalae Howe.

Jokes: Why is a stupid boy like the Amazon Jungle? They're both dense. Customer: Waiter, there is a button in my salad. I want to see the manager! Waiter: Don't get so excited. It probably fell off while the salad was dressing.

Classifieds: For sale: Sisters and brothers of all different ages... Brandy's cat is having babies, $4,000 each... Lost: Drew lost pocket power gun, 50 cents reward... Allie's missing her eraser, her name is on it.

Food: Pizza egg! With real pizza inside. Two dozen only $5.00. What a deal! You'll be cracked silly over them.

Shorts may help beat the heat

STUDENT LIFE AT HHSS

by: ERIN
LYNCH

IHOPE EVERYONE had an enjoyable weekend. If you didn't get lots of chocolate, I'm sure you'll like two four-day weeks. Easter is now out of the way and soon the May 24th weekend will be here. Soon, the sun should be shining and we will be sitting in a hot classroom listening to some teacher tell us about the importance of paying attention the last month or so. All we'll be able to think about is going home changing into our bathing suit and going for a swim.

In the past years students have tried to wear shorts but it has been called unacceptable, unbusinesslike, and has just not worked. The SAC came up with a solution this year that pleases the teachers and students. As in the fall, the school will be selling shorts. They come in seven different colours and with your choice of corresponding crests. These are the only shorts which can be worn. Why not buy a pair? Starting this week, order your shorts for $15.

Are you a born leader? Do you handle money well? Are you a good secretary? Are you the life of the party? If you answer yes to any of the above questions maybe you should consider being nominated in the upcoming SAC elections as president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary and social convener. Nominations will be starting soon. I'll keep you posted on the election and who is running for what job.

The video dance is next Friday and it looks like it's going to be really good with three video screens, lasers and concert lighting. The same people who did it last time will be doing it again. This time they promise it to be a great show and are as excited as I know are.

We are slowly coming to the end of the year. That doesn't mean it will be a boring two months. Elections, prom and the school picnic have not even taken place yet and then the SAC will be planning meetings for next year and approaching the board about fund raisers. Although the end of the year is approaching quickly, we still have a ways to go.

With birthdays past and future, friends and family make the day

WEST GUILFORD NEWS

by: ELEANOR
COOPER

The community congratulates the Tri-County PeeWees on their victory in the "B" championship series, with particular attention to those from this area: Colin Morrison, Don and Pat Morrison, the coach; Kenny Teasdale, and Billy Koz. Congratulations to OMHA all-Ontario winners with Mark Stamp, son of Lyle and Carol on this winning team.

Congratulations to Dawn Hebert on passing the Junior Bronze Dance in figure skating, and to Nicole Cooper, Carrie Sisson, and Kim Mulholland who represented Haliburton in the Fenelon Frolics.

Apparently I missed Angela Bilodeau's name in the column in reference to the splendid skating show she helped to produce. Her efforts are worthy of applause and due apology is made for the omission.

Approximately 50 people gathered over the afternoon at the Centre to wish Neilson Owens a happy 84th birthday on Saturday (the actual birth date). It was heart-warming to notice the old chums of Carnarvon school days come to wish him well, and to see everyone chatting with long time friends brought together on a happy occasion. Marge Nicholls and Cheryl Cooper served a delicious supper to about twenty of us. The opening of gifts and cards concluded the time together. Thanks to all who came to celebrate. We appreciated your presence so much.

I have tickets for 1990-91 concert series: Elmer Iseler Singers, Trio Vivant, and Anton Kuerti are the artists this year. Phone me if you would like to get your ticket early, before you have to pay the GST.

You no doubt have seen and been cheered by the big, colourful plastic bunnies on Mrs. Phrona Sisson's lawn every year before Easter. They will be only something to remember now. When Mrs. Sisson looked out on Easter morning they were destroyed and the largest one was missing.

Many were the relatives and friends home for the weekend. I'm only going to attempt to name a few: Kris Sisson and Peter Cole with their children Andrea and Sasha at Norma and Ray Sisson's. Ray is home now from hospital. Cyd Barley and Marty Rapson at the Rapson's; at the Yateman's was J'Nan, Mike; Curtis and Derek were home at Shirley (Cleve) Sisson's.

Marge Bain visited her friend Lil Davidson in Niagara Falls for Easter.

Paul Madden was home at Sid and Louise Cooper's to celebrate his 27th birthday.

International Earth Day is being celebrated in communities all over the world on April 22. Families or individuals, here are a few suggestions as to how this special time might be used: plant a tree, or wildflowers, go for a hike and pick up any garbage on your way; go on a picnic—a litterless picnic; write to your municipality urging specific waste disposal containers at landfill sites, and ask that arrangements be made for hazardous wastes; create bags out of non-recyclable plastics; and best of all be at the park to join in the celebration in town. For further information phone Ginny Muenzel, 754-2181.

Again, please join the family of Elva Cooper on her 90th birthday celebration (how many times per column do I use that word?) at the centre on April 28, 2-4 p.m.

Ernest Voycey celebrates 80th birthday at centre

March 25, 1990, was a happy day for Ernest Voycey who celebrated his eightieth birthday with 19 family members with brunch at the Cottage Restaurant in West Guilford. After the delicious meal a poem was read from brother-in-law Roy Rogers of Vernon, B.C. about fishing days on Redstone Lake. Daughter Eileen Cockburn read a poem she composed and made a presentation form the family. A number of other family birthdays were also celebrated. Ernie's great-grandson, Ryan, was six on March 23, the same day as Ernie's birthday. Also having birthdays were Heather Cockburn and daughter Natalie who will be one, also Lois and Sherry Cockburn. Ernie was especially pleased to have daughter Linda Voycey home from her teaching position in Northern Alberta for the occasion. She also has a birthday soon.

The group adjourned from the Cottage to the West Guilford Community Centre where an Open House was held to honour Ernie on 80 years of achievement. Ernie was born and raised at Blairhampton and went to work at a young age in the bush and on the highway to Dorset. In 1936, he married Grace Rogers and built a little house at Eagle Lake. After working at the Cooperage Mill he went to work lumbering in the Redstone Lake area. Then in 1946 they moved to a farm at Gamebridge. He worked on Highway 12 when it was being built and had an accident in the barn when the lantern fell and destroyed the big barn so that a new one had to be built. Then in 1963 he bought one of the discontinued canal houses and moved and renovated it and sold the farm. Later in 1969 he built a house on the Portage Road where they now reside. Ernie worked at carpentry and eventually built a cottage in 1972 near Redstone Lake which all the family are privileged to use.

During the birthday party, Harry Furness made a presentation of a plaque from Gamebridge Church. Certificates were also received from leaders of government. Ernie cut the beautifully decorated birthday cake done by great-daughter-in-law Sherry Cockburn. Everyone wished Ernie all the best and many more.

THANK YOU

THE FAMILY of the late Art Parish would like to thank the many people who have assisted us this past week. Thank you:
To the staff at Extencare for 13 months of excellent care and especially for your many kindnesses during Dad's final days. We were overwhelmed by your compassion, dedication and professional competence.
To Dr. Hartwick for your many years of medical care. But most of all for the honesty and respect you gave Dad. A conversation with you was always his best medicine.
To Evelyn Stevenson for your friendship and loyalty. You made it possible for him to stay home as long as possible.
To the VON for your professional care during Dad's last years at home. To family and friends for your visits at home and Extencare; for your expressions of sympathy; cards, flowers, food and visitations. Dad would have been proud and happy that you remembered him.
To Reverend Jim Crighton and Melissa Stephens for your service of celebration. You knew exactly how to fill our needs and captured the essence of Dad's spirit. To Gord Monk and staff—you are so kind and obliging. To Elva Milburn and Marvis Burk, Molly Freeman and Jean Neville. Your dinners were exactly what we needed to get us through the night.
To our employers and co-workers for being so understanding and supportive. Chuck and Toots, Claude and Gail, Tom and Barb, Stan and Sandra, Larry and Julie. The Parish Tribe from up on the Line.
27-P-18

MANY THANKS to Dr. Heyes, Dr. Moga, Dr. Abrahamse, nurses and staff of the Haliburton Hospital for the wonderful care given me during my illness. A SPECIAL THANKS to the nurses and staff at Haliburton Hospital for their care and kindness shown to me during my recent stay. To Dr. Heyes and Charles Jordin a "Big Thanks!". For all those who visited and for prayer support and gifts, thanks so much. Meant so much and a help to get feeling better. A "Giant Thank-you" to Sam and Dorothy Rivers for all their help. Last, but not least, to all my co-workers at school and the board office. A "Special Thanks" for their kindness and support. Jean Thomas.
